PIERRE ELLIOTT TRUDEAU

Thoughts On Man And Politics

Special to The Times

Editor's Note: It's a quirk of fate that Prime Minister Trudeau's 1958 book, "Approaches to Politics," is to be published for the first time in an English translation Nov. 19. While it is not suggested that the prime minister's decision to invoke the War Measures Act necessarily represented a change in his philosophy, these quotes from more than a decade ago are fascinating today.

The following is the first of two selections from the book. The second will be published in Monday's Times.

By PIERRE ELLIOTT TRUDEAU

We give politicians the power of life and death over us; we authorize them to send us to war, imprison us, tax us, regulate our activity, expropriate our houses, discipline our children, supervise our conduct, our reading and our speech. We let these men make the laws that restrict us, direct the policemen who arrest us, choose the lawyers who prosecute us, appoint the judges who sentence us . . . Should one of them happen to over-step the bounds, we allow him to be made a judge or a legislator for life in one of our upper houses.

We are going to be governed whether we like it or not; it is up to us to see that we are governed no worse than is absolutely necessary. We must therefore concern ourselves with politics, as Pascal said, to mitigate as far as possible the madness of our rulers.

Sermons and worthy books are always talking of respect for the human personality and of the inviolability of conscience. In the context of our Christian civilization, these phrases have no meaning unless all men are regarded as fundamentally free and equal, each man being of infinite value in himself, bound only by his own conscience; from which it must follow that neither authority or obedience ought to be taken for granted. If my father, my priest or my king wants to exert authority over me, if he wants to give me orders, he has to be able to explain, in a way that satisfies my reason, on what grounds he must command and I must obey.

Democracy recognizes that one person may be right and ninety-nine wrong; that is why freedom of speech is sacred. The one person must always have the right to proclaim his truth in the hope of persuading the ninety-nine to change their point of view.

What is the source of the astonishingly universal law that gives so much power to our political leaders? Some take the easy way out by reiterating that authority comes from God. They omit to explain why God conferred it on a Stalin or a Hitler; or why, in our democracies, God would choose to express Himself through the intermediary of electoral thugs and big campaign contributors.

As long as authority does not pass all bounds of stupidity and incompetence, it is sure to hold its position.

The purpose of living in society is that every man may fulfil himself as far as possible. Authority has no justification except to allow the establishment and development of a system that encourages such fulfilment.

Society is made for man; if it serves him badly he is entitled to overthrow it.

One can say that the power of governments rests on a psychological disposition on most people's part that it is good to obey and bad to disobey. Why is this belief universal? Partly because the majority seek only their own comfort and pleasure: When these ends are assured, they ask no more than to conform to a given social order and to obey political masters who work to maintain that order. Few men are aroused by injustice when they are sure of not being its victims themselves.

Paper to Define Police Powers

QUEBEC (CP) — Justice Minister Jerome Choquette said Friday that a white paper on law enforcement being prepared by his department will deal basically with the organization of Quebec police forces and touch on possible restrictions of certain civil liberties.

Choquette told a news conference that the study, to be made public next year, will cover the training, qualifications, equipment and numbers of police in the province as well as the possible legalization of wire tapping and bugging practices.

Earlier in the national assembly while announcing the study, Choquette said it was being prepared to show "what means of control the government should have."

In Montreal, meanwhile, police reported no new developments in the hunt for the kidnappers of British trade envoy James C. Cross, 49, held since Oct. 5, and Quebec labor minister Pierre Laporte, abducted Oct. 10 and slain Oct. 17.

The Montreal Gazette said today that three of the kidnappers may have escaped from an apartment where police arrested Bernard Lortie, 19-year-old student who admitted taking part in the kidnapping of Laporte.

The Gazette says a high-ranking police official reported all four were in the Montreal apartment, but three hid in a cubbyhole in a walk-in clothes closet when police confronted Lortie.

Police made a room-by-room check, placed a guard

Lemieux Demands Freedom

MONTREAL (CP) — Lawyer Marcel Cinq-Mars, president of the Quebec Bar Association, said today he has received a copy of a letter purportedly signed by lawyer Robert Lemieux, in prison now charged with seditious conspiracy under the War Measures Act.

Cinq-Mars said in an interview the 32-page letter, directed to him Friday by French-language radio station CKLM to which the original was delivered, contained five demands.

They were: That Lemieux be given access to his files; that he obtain bail; that procedures on the charges against him be stopped; that the Quebec Bar intervene "in the face of the degredation of the administration of justice in Quebec;" and that the Bar nominate a lawyer or a committee to oversee "the affair."

Cinq-Mars said he had not yet verified the authenticity of the letter.

SYRIANS CALM AFTER COUP

DAMASCUS (AP) — Defence Minister Hafez al-Assad seized control of Syria's government today after a quiet midnight coup that overthrew the Marxist civilian government.

Most citizens of Damascus—25 miles from the front lines of the Israeli army—were unaware that a coup had taken place and that their government leaders were in jail.

This Syrian capital was calm, with no signs of trouble on the surface and no unusual military activity.

Arab diplomatic sources said Assad and his men arrested President Noureddin Atassi, Premier Youssef Zayyen and Maj.-Gen. Salah Jadid, a leader of the Syrian Baath party, in raids on their homes late Friday, the Moslem sabbath. Jadid's only title is assistant secretary-general of the party, but he was the behind-the-scenes strongman of the Atassi regime.

None of the arrested men was harmed, the sources said.

Social Credit Meeting Backs Gaglardi Policy

By BRUCE YEMEN
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — If the Social Credit convention is any indication, Reihabilitation Minister Phil Gaglardi is riding a wave of friendly public opinion in his war on the welfare rolls.

"Thank you much for strengthening my hand," Gaglardi told cheering delegates Friday night after they quickly passed resolutions in favor of "work-for-welfare" for able-bodied recipients, a six-month welfare eligibility period for out-of-province applicants and against "abuses" by welfare recipients.

Delegates tabled a resolution from Fort George after being warned by some speakers that it could open the party to "nonsense criticism" from newspapers and others.

'HUMAN MISFITS'

The resolution stated that "our province is becoming a haven for all the human misfits on the North American continent" and asked for the government to take "this type of person" off welfare and to take "further steps to correct this social menace in our midst."

In response to a resolution calling for able-bodied recipients to be put to work, Gaglardi said a pilot project is getting under way in Langley to provide about 20 social assistance recipients with municipal jobs after a training period.

Federal, provincial and municipal governments would share in the costs of the program, which Gaglardi described as a "type of subsidy." He said he has urged the idea be extended to as many parts of the province as possible during the winter.

DENIES CHARGE

Gaglardi also explained that he didn't refuse to accept a number of Tibetan refugees being brought to Canada by the federal government. "We suggested there would be better places to put them," he said.

He said B.C. still has welfare recipients who came here as refugees from the Hungarian revolution.

"We're right behind you," a delegate shouted to Gaglardi.

The minister said about 50 per cent of single young men and women on the welfare rolls are from out of the province and about 34 per cent are married couples.

"That means we're carrying a burden for the other provinces," he said.

In other moves, delegates:

- Defeated a resolution calling for an end to further relaxation of liquor laws.
- Defeated a proposed ban on strikes or lockouts after Labor Minister Les Peterson said only Communist countries have succeeded in that aim and they "weren't particularly good examples to follow."
- Defeated a resolution calling on the provincial government to go into the automobile insurance business on a competitive basis with private companies.
- Approved a resolution

60,000 Death Toll Feared In Tidal Wave

DACCA (Reuter) — About 60,000 people may have drowned when a hurricane-driven tidal wave smashed into heavily-populated Hatia Island at the mouth of the River Ganges in East Pakistan.

The magnitude of the disaster has not been confirmed so far because communication with the island has been blacked out since the 120-miles-an-hour winds of a hurricane ripped across the delta area Thursday.

The official count so far is 800 dead, Radio Pakistan said today, but unofficial reports say that half of Hatia Island's 120,000 population is feared to have been swept away by the 15-foot tidal wave.

The radio said damage to houses, other property and crops was described as colossal.

Three launches set out with medical aid and supplies for Hatia where at least 500 persons had died, the radio added.

A helicopter also dropped supplies there and three gunboats of the Pakistan navy left Chittagong for the area with relief supplies, it added.

Government officials here have been trying desperately to re-establish telecommunications contact with Hatia Island 150 miles to the south, and other islands ravaged by the hurricane.

LOSSES HEAVY

Reports from other points have listed additional heavy death tolls and crippling losses of houses, cattle and crops.

Nothing is known of the fate of between 15,000 and 20,000 Hindus who went to Dubla

Murder Suspects Charged in Court

Two young Canadian Armed Forces servicemen and an unemployed Victoria man were charged in Victoria Provincial Court today with the non-capital murder of part-time cab driver, Gerald Mulholland, 37.

William A. Larlham, 20, and Garry Smith, 18, both of CFB Esquimalt, and Terrance Parsons, 20, 1339 Newport, were remanded in custody until Monday when they appeared before Judge Edmond St. Jorre.

FOUND TUESDAY

Mulholland was found at 7:45 p.m. Tuesday slumped over the wheel of his taxi in the 600 block Battery Street in James Bay.

He was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Joseph's Hospital a short time later and an autopsy indicated the cause of death was a severed artery at the base of the skull.

The dead man, who lived at 917 Bewdley, drove cab part-time when he was off-duty as a CFB seaman stationed at Esquimalt.

Police found his empty wallet in a garbage container in an alley behind 150 Douglas.

PLAYED SOCCER

Mulholland was an active man, playing goal for Gorge Molsons of the Victoria and District Soccer League of the third division. He had been selected to represent British Columbia on a Victoria armed forces team in a national soccer tournament for the Canadian Armed Forces championship at Kingston, Ont.

Rewards totalling $2,300 were put up Thursday jointly by the Victoria police commission and C and C Transportation Co. Ltd., which operates a fleet of taxis in Victoria.

A police spokesman said Friday following the arrest of the three he was unable to say whether the reward posting had any effect in apprehending the accused.

The notice said the expiry date for the money was Nov. 1, 1971, and in the case of more than one claimant the commission would apportion the sum.

Canadian GM Strike 'Not Over'

TORONTO (CP) — An official of the United Auto Workers warned today that the union still has "a long way to go" in contract negotiations with General Motors of Canada Ltd.

Commenting on the tentative settlement reached between GM and the UAW in the United States, Abe Taylor said that "if anyone thinks the strike is over yet they had better reconsider."

Taylor, president of UAW Local 222 at Oshawa, Ont.—the largest of the seven locals covering 23,000 GM Canada workers—was commenting on the Canadian negotiations expected to resume here Monday.

He said striking workers in Toronto, Oshawa, London, Windsor and St. Catharines, Ont., and in Ste. Therese, Que., "should not live in a false sense of security because of the settlement reached Friday in U.S. contract negotiations."

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP) —An explosion rocked an oil platform off the Louisiana coast Friday night, gushing a hot chemical liquid onto a work area and burning 14 men, three of them critically, a Humber Oil and Refining Co. spokesman said.

FLQ Suspect Worked For Premier

MONTREAL (CP) — A lawyer said Saturday that Jocelyne Despatie, charged with seditious conspiracy in the Front de Liberation du Quebec crisis, was a receptionist for a while in the Montreal office of Premier Robert Bourassa of Quebec.

Miss Despatie, 25, was charged Friday with seditious conspiracy and with being or, declaring herself to be a member of the outlawed FLQ.

Her lawyer, Michel Proulx, said in an interview Miss Despatie did not work in the premier's office "after Oct. 8," three days after British diplomat James Cross was kidnapped.

The detractors of democracy are wrong in equating this form of government with anarchy, disorder, impotence.

On the one hand we say that all men are brothers, that is to say, equals. But on the other hand wherever we look, in whatever country we may be, we see that the great majority are subject to a small number of superiors who make the law for them.

There is no territory in the world that does not fall under the dominion of some sovereign power. The hermit's cave, whether he likes it or not, is regulated by the laws of possession and property. The gypsy cannot tell your fortune without liability under the law of contract. And I have watched the nomads of the Asiatic steppe being required to pay duty to the Afghan treasury when their migrations took them into the Khyber Pass.

Men stay free because no one is fully vested by God or nature with authority to rule his fellows. James I of England wrote big books to prove that he was king by divine right; he believed that his son Charles I could be too, but that did not prevent the English from cutting off Charles' head. Louis XVI of France and Tsar Nicholas II of Russia ended their careers in much the same manner. And in democracies political parties and prime ministers that thought themselves eternal have been sent packing by the people, and will be again.

No man or group of men can impose authority on a population against its will. When injustice reaches a certain point, even soldiers and policemen refuse to obey — as witness the French, Russian, Chinese, Indo-Chinese and other revolutions.

Human societies differ from the societies of bees in that men are always free to decide what form of authority they will adopt, and who will exercise it. And it really is men who have the responsibility of taking these decisions — not God, Providence or Nature. In the last analysis, any given political authority exists only because men consent to obey it. In this sense, what exists is not so much the authority as the obedience.

What is it that the citizens desire? That is the question every democratic government must ask itself constantly.

As for Le Soleil and Montreal-Matin, I know neither the owners, nor the editors, nor the editorial writers. But, anonymous as they are, I take much pleasure in informing them — if they don't know it already — that they are members of a fine crew of liars and cowards.

MPs Continue Study of Act

By BOB DOUGLAS

OTTAWA (CP) — After an early flurry of action Friday the Commons resumed painstaking study of the proposed Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, 1970, managing to complete examination of two clauses.

The progress of the debate, already five days long, appeared to exasperate some MPs. The House has been sitting in committee-of-the-whole giving clause-by-clause consideration to the bill designed to replace regulations under the War Measures Act.

David Lewis (NDP—York South), deputy leader of the New Democratic Party, remarked at one point that there seemed little hope of any amendments to the bill being accepted unless they were proposed by the government.

Robert McCleave (PC—Halifax-East Hants) said there had been only one useful exchange in 40 minutes of discussion on one clause. The same arguments had been repeatedly advanced.

The debate will resume Monday on the measure that retains many of the provisions of the War Measures Act regulations for dealing with the terrorist Front de Liberation du Quebec. But some would be more limited such as requiring charges to be laid against those detained within seven days rather than 21 days as under the regulations.

Earlier Friday, the government endured an apparently embarrassing vote on poor cabinet attendance at the daily question period.

The government defeated 79 to 42 a motion by Stanley Knowles (NDP—Winnipeg North Centre) to end the question period after opposition members complained that several important cabinet ministers, including Prime Minister Trudeau, were absent.

The motion was supported by the Conservatives, New Democrats and Creditistes.

Liberal backbenchers dominated the question period as opposition members boycotted it.

Also Friday, Northern Affairs Minister Jean Chretien told the Commons that two gas drillers have been fired for drilling too deeply and setting off a natural gas blowout at a rig on King Christian Island in the Northwest Territories.

COMPANY ABSOLVED

Pan Arctic Oils Ltd. was not negligent in the incident but members of a drilling crew had disregarded orders not to drill deeper than 1,800 feet, he said. The blowout has lasted three weeks.

Pierre de Bane (L—Matane) said that one clause in the public order bill could lead to the "breakup of our families."

The clause would make anyone liable to a five-year jail term who knows or has "reasonable cause to believe" that someone else is guilty of an offence under the act and helps that person with the intent to interfere with his arrest.

Anglican Priest Seeks Board Seat

Anglican priest Rev. Walter Donald, who doubles as CFAX youth co-ordinator, announced Friday he will seek one of two vacant Greater Victoria school board seats in civic elections next month.

Donald will run for one of the seats now occupied by George Curran and Les Karagianis, who will not seek re-election.

He was asked whether, in the light of recent developments in Quebec, there is any justification for imposing extra controls on teachers because of the influence they are presumed to have on students.

The 33-year-old priest said adequate laws already exist to protect students, and teachers should not be singled out for special legislation.

"I don't think any teacher should be tried by school boards, by other teachers, by parents or by the students," Donald said.

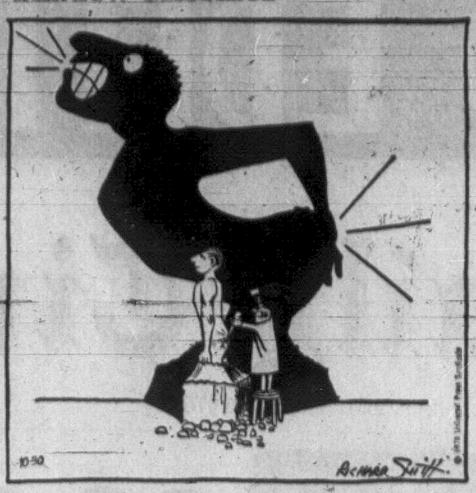
"The one thing students have to have is a sophisticated understanding of politics, and there is no way a teacher can communicate anything about politics unless he goes into details about these groups like the FLQ."

Donald said he does not support teachers who advocate violent overthrow of governments "in Canada."

"There's a difference between communicating the facts and advocating the facts."

Donald said he likes the concept of elections-at-large for the district, which will be introduced in December. School board candidates formerly represented the municipality in which they resided. Now they can seek the votes of residents throughout the district.

Shadow Mischief



Water Sharing Not Ruled Out

Times Staff

VANCOUVER — Recreation and Conservation Minister Ken Kiernan said today British Columbia would have to consider sharing its water resources with the United States if that country had demonstrated "the greatest possible degree of efficiency in using its own water."

Kiernan made the comment in an interview following a speech to the Social Credit party convention at the Bayshore Inn.

"This world has to live together," he said in putting forward the view which represents a much softer line than was expressed by Premier Bennett during the past legislative session.

Bennett said British Columbia wouldn't export "a single drop of water" to the U.S. if there was any question that Canada might need the resources for itself.

NO EFFICIENCY

Kiernan stressed that no country has yet demonstrated total efficiency in using water resources. The United States would be the first to admit this, he said.

"Certainly we shouldn't encourage others to muck up their own water resources," he said.

But he said that if it can be shown that people who need our water have managed theirs with maximum efficiency, "then we would have a different proposition for the one presently before us."

WOULD BE WRONG

Kiernan made the remarks after being asked whether he was referring to water when he told the delegates that it would be socially, politically and economically wrong for British Columbia to take a "dog-in-the-manger attitude" about sharing its resources.

Kiernan said he would agree that it would be many years before any country could claim to have demonstrated maximum efficiency in using its own water resources.

Earlier, delegates passed a resolution calling for the provincial government to work towards making it financially possible for third-stage treatment of all sewage being dumped into waterways.

The resolution, from the Cariboo constituency association, said secondary treatment fails to remove phosphate, nitrate and nitrite fertilizers, thus allowing "an almost unbreakable cycle of algae growth and decay" to continue.

SPECIAL TAX

The convention also supported a resolution proposing a special tax on all foreign land-owners who are not residents in the province for a continuous period of six months each year.

The resolution, from the West Vancouver group, noted that a large amount of prime land in British Columbia is purchased by foreign speculators who later reap big profits "at the expense of permanent residents of British Columbia who develop adjacent lands and services."

Delegates narrowly defeated a resolution asking the provincial government to go into the life insurance business as a means of building up a pool of capital for public projects.

The convention also turned down a proposal to make the home acquisition grant subject to a needs test. A resolution suggested the grant be increased from $1,000 to $3,000 and limited to people earning less than $10,000 a year.

In spite of Resources Minister Ray Williston's plea Friday that the federal Centennial grant to B.C. be used for an environmental control centre, the convention passed a resolution asking the provincial government to use part of the grant to build a chronic intermediate care hospital.

POT HANDBOOK PULLED FROM SHELF

MACON, Ga. (UPI) — A book describing marijuana-smoking as "simply grand" was pulled from the shelves of a junior high school library after parents complained.

The book, entitled "Pot, a Handbook on Marijuana," is not on a state-approved list, and Gov. Lester Maddox, when informed of the incident, said: "I have chewed the state board of education three or four times for permitting such books."

LONDON (UPI) — Snow fell and ice coated roads in Scotland and parts of Northern Ireland Friday, bringing Britons their first taste of winter weather. Temperatures fell below freezing in many northern areas and dawn frost covered the countryside.

Bonn-Warsaw Draft Pact Set

WARSAW (AP) — Negotiators for West Germany and Poland have drafted a treaty to heal the diplomatic schism carved 21 years ago when a Nazi blitzkrieg overran Poland and began the Second World War.

A spokesman for the Bonn delegation said Friday that Foreign Minister Walter Scheel will initial the treaty next Wednesday with his Polish counterpart, Stefan Jedrychowski, and that Chancellor Willy Brandt is expected to sign it in Warsaw before Christmas.

Jedrychowski said the pact is important historically and should begin "the proper process of normalization" of relations.

Ruediger von Wechmar, chief spokesman for the West German delegation, said the two foreign ministers also discussed other matters, including Polish permission for Germans living in Poland to emigrate.

RECOGNIZES FRONTIER

An important feature of the document is Bonn's recognition of Poland's western frontier for the first time since the German surrender in 1945. Details were not announced, but it was understood that the boundary is drawn at the Oder and Neisse rivers, incorporating large areas of former German territory.

Adolph Hitler's invasion of Poland Sept. 1, 1939, brought on the Second World War, and diplomatic relations between the countries have not existed since then. Poland lost six million citizens during the war, most victims of Nazi concentration camps.

Bonn has indicated in recent months a desire to break down diplomatic barriers between countries in the Soviet bloc and the West, setting the stage for the Polish pact by signing a non-aggression treaty with Russia.

In the adjoining Barisal district, 20 miles south of Dacca, the Bhola subdivision and island were reported badly hit by the tidal wave.

About 1,000 people were believed to have died in Bhola, one unconfirmed report said.

A pilot reported that three-quarters of the villages in the islands of the Barisal district appear to have been washed away.

Some reports said the tidal wave smashed ashore with a height of 20 feet in some of the stricken areas.

It was reported that 70 persons were killed in the port city of Chittagong Thursday night. Other towns hit included Cox's Bazar and Khulna.

Light and power supplies were knocked out in the devastated region.

Because of a lack of helicopters in East Pakistan, relief teams were forced to move by river, carrying food, medicines and other vitally needed supplies.

We'd like to prove we're better

Try our hot water heater for 3 months. Free.

Free. How come?

Free because we'd like to prove that a domestic oil fired hot water heater from Chevron is faster. Up to seven times faster than electric ones. And up to three times faster than gas water heaters. Free also, because we'd like to prove that an oil fired hot water heater from us is cheaper to operate. Up to 40% cheaper than electricity. And up to 20% cheaper than gas.

What kind of hot water heater do you get for nothing?

You get the best. Our hot water heater carries a ten year tank warranty. It's compact, rust-proof, fully insulated and double glass-lined. It delivers lots and lots of hot water. (90 gallons every hour.) And here's the best part: use of this oil fired hot water heater is yours for three months. Free. Including installation costs up to $80.

What's the catch?

There are two. An understandable one is that you already have to have an oil furnace. Another is that you contract to buy top quality Chevron Heating Fuels.

What do I do to keep it?

You can either lease or buy. It's only $4.13 a month to lease and if you want to buy, you can spread the payments over a ten year period.

I accept your offer in the spirit in which it's given.

We're delighted and welcome the opportunity to prove we're better. All you have to do now is call one of the Chevron Housewarmers listed below. He will give you the full details and will arrange a convenient time to install your water heater for the free three month period. (This offer expires December 31, 1970.)

WEEK AT CITY HALL

City Not Bound By Harbor Vote

By CLEMENT CHAPPLE

Will the referendum ballot approved Thursday by city council for the December municipal election accurately reflect the public's views on how the city should proceed in guiding redevelopment of the Inner Harbor waterfront?

Whatever the answer to that question, voters who enter polling booths Dec. 12 are going to have to react with a simple "yes" or "no" and they won't be given a chance to argue the validity of the ballot's existence.

The extra ballot will be there because city council has been unable to come to a firm consensus on Inner Harbor development.

The Reid proposal, at the centre of the controversy, has split council into two philosophies, one propounded by Mayor Courtney Haddock, the other by Ald. Peter Pollen.

Arithmetic would seem to be in Haddock's favor. Pollen is the only alderman who has opposed the Reid proposal outright. Others have jumped back and forth, tried to ride both horses at once, or avoided the question entirely.

But this past week Ald. Hugh Ramsay came up with an idea to let them all off the hook, and Haddock went along with it. The mayor gave his tacit support to Ramsay's proposal to hold a referendum vote to plumb public opinion on the question of waterfront development.

The referendum will ask the voter "are you in favor of the expenditure" of TWO MILLION DOLLARS ($2,000,000)" to buy some city waterfront land.

Although the city will not be bound in any way to the outcome of the vote, there is nothing in the wording to suggest this and it could easily fool the unwary voter into thinking he is being asked to approve a specific expenditure.

The motion to hold the referendum came as a surprise to Pollen and Ald. Tom Christie, neither of whom read their copies of the council's agenda before Thursday, the day of the meeting, even though they received them on Tuesday.

Yet, Pollen and Christie were not consulted by Ramsay, who said before the council meeting he had gained a majority of support beforehand. The city manager and city solicitor, however, were consulted at least ten days beforehand, given time to prepare a bylaw in advance so that it could ne given third reading immediately.

Haddock stayed mostly out of the debate, but he asked Pollen if the latter wouldn't be pleased to see such a referendum gain success. Pollen didn't take the bait. He did say that the referendum was a "contrivance" aimed at discrediting his development policies.

Christie, taken even more by surprise, blurted out his belief that the motion was "most impulsive." Haddock, showing he was well-briefed on its intention, quickly replied: "It's not impulsive."

Ramsay calmly denied Pollen's passionate speech opposing the holding of the referendum, but it is difficult to see any other purpose in it than an attempt to discredit Pollen's views on harbor redevelopment.

First of all, Ramsay said Thursday outside the council meeting that he doesn't think there is any chance that most people will vote "yes" in answer to the referendum. Ald. Clyde Savage echoed this view before council.

Secondly, the $2 million referred to has never been mentioned prior to the motion as representing the costs involved in any scheme put forward by Pollen.

Pollen first raised the idea of buying waterfront land Sept. 1. Before council's B Committee, Pollen at that time requested that the Advisory Planning Commission give its advice on the idea of buying the Reid property only. Pollen received unanimous support at that time for his suggestion.

The Reid property is valued by Ramsay at $750,000. He included the land between the Reid plot and the Johnson Street bridge to bring the figure up to $1,650,000. Business "relocation" costs made the total into a round $2 million.

If seriously proposed, the referendum question of buying up that waterfront land would be opposite to the city's philosophy of urban renewal: injecting a minimum of public capital to attract a maximum of private capital.

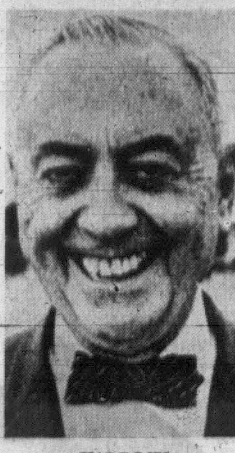
If seriously proposed, the referendum would conceivably be accompanied by some kind of promotional campaign to acquaint the voter with the realities of the question being put to him, as was done when the last capital budget was put before the electorate.

The city does not plan to make any further effort to prepare voters for the referendum, but Ramsay claims that it is a "legitimate" way to guage public opinion on the question of harbor redevelopment.



HADDOCK

POLLEN
'. . . contrivance'

Buying waterfront property is only one way of controlling development and it is only one of the suggestions Pollen has made in his sporadic attempt to redirect the city's traditional philosophy of development.

Pollen's opponents have repeatedly expressed their disdain for the use of "emotionalism" in the public debate of public issues. It is curious therefore that they can justify a connection between Pollen's policies and a frightening and arbitrary $2 million price tag.

If the city were sincerely interested in knowing the public's opinion on buying waterfront land, it would perhaps reveal the details of its latest plan to buy the Ocean Cement property, and put that question in the form of a referendum.

Or it might reveal the terms of its negotiations with the federal government to buy the old RCMP headquarters land in Victoria West, and put that to a referendum.

If the city will use the referendum to extract a judgment on Pollen's policies, perhaps it should apply the same standard to its own. Otherwise it will take a good deal of democratic gynmastics to read a negative response to the referendum as a positive response to some undefined alternative.

REPORT FROM THE LEGISLATURE

The Socred Party: Why Bother?

By BRUCE YEMEN

VANCOUVER — A number of Communist plots to subvert the youth of British Columbia were revealed here Friday at the Social Credit party annual convention.

Christianity was backed to the hilt, no-good, out-of-province welfare bums were put in their place and American "lefty professors" were denounced, alcohol and the evils thereof were dealt with firmly.

But don't get the Social Credit Party wrong. Most of the really extremist talk came from a small collection of, well, radicals.

There was a good deal of chuckling at their expense among delegates, who didn't get too militant, except perhaps on the issue of tougher welfare assistance policies.

You might even say it is unfortunate that the party as a whole often gets tagged with the "irrelevant" label because of the little-old ladies and men (some not so old) who spy a red in every classroom.

But the fact is the party's provincial association is largely irrelevant for different reasons.

More than in any other party, the Social Credit Party in British Columbia simply doesn't stand a chance against its legislative arm, which happens to be the Social Credit government.

The domination of B.C. politics by one man, W. A. C. Bennett, is one reason why the proceedings on the floor of the convention at the Bayshore Inn are of only marginal relevance.

Bennett is too good a politicians to confuse party feeling with public feeling on a major issue. He is also too independent a man to get involved in the elaborate manoeuvrings of convention politics.

In short, he could probably elect a political party called "Bennett and Associates," with no help from any permanent party organization of any kind.

But if Bennett has understandably awed the party into submission, it may be less easy to understand how his cabinet mates appear to exercise similar sway over the faithful.

Sharp debate on important issues seems to dissolve into trusting deference to a few wise, and sometimes incomprehensible, assurances from cabinet ministers.

A survey of the list of more than 100 resolutions facing the convention suggests that the range of dissent within the party is unnaturally narrow.

The government's classic approach to the pollution problem — there's-no-panacea-we-need-more-research-and-don't-be-a-knocker-because-any-idiot-can-criticize — seems to have prevaded the entire party ranks.

The hard-core "righties" who are so concerned about the hard-core "lefties" have great entertainment value, for those who can value sincerity for its own sake, but they have another more serious effect.

They use up the time of conventions debating minor resolutions when more time should be spent on major issues.

But after so many years in the shadow of the legislative arm of the party, the conventions may not want to discuss the serious issues. The impression gained here at the Bayshore Inn is that the way to handle a tough resolution is either to defeat it or pass it, but do it quickly and do it with as few people voting as possible to make the decision meaningless.

Perhaps the ultimate test of the Social Credit League's survival as an organization will be in the leadership succession issue.

Premier Bennett show no signs of quitting, but when he does quit or when his job becomes vacant for other reasons, the party may be in an embarrassing position.

It has no established mechanics for finding a new leader. A legislative caucus agreement to select an acting leader might prevent a constitutional crisis with the Lieutenant Governor in the middle but it wouldn't solve the party's problem.

It could be torn apart over the issue unless selection mechanics are established. That's the job the 1968 convention wanted done by a committee but somewhere in between, some key party people decided it might be better to forget the whole thing.

It still isn't certain whether anyone will manage to raise the issue on the floor of the convention this year, or indeed whether anyone wants to.

If Premier Bennett winds up with the privilege of in effect nominating his successor, the party association will have lost another battle in the struggle to have some serious meaning in life.

It's not just because the 'characters" in the party might wind up holding the balance of power in selection of a new leader that Bennett might worry a little about what could happen in a wide-open convention fight for the leadership.

It may just be that the party association has been "too kind, too considerate" over the years, as Bennett phrased it himself Friday, to have won from him the kind of respect that he reserves for tough political battlers.

Besides, Bennett can almost be regarded as a man who picked himself to lead the party — a man who may not see any reason why he shouldn't pick his successor.

UNPRECEDENTED CAUCUS APPEARANCE

CBC Chief to Tell Grits Story

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Laurent Picard, vice-president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, is scheduled to meet with the communications committee of the Liberal caucus next week to explain the inner workings of the government-owned broadcasting system.

Hugh Faulkner, parliamentary secretary to State Secretary Gerard Pelletier, said Friday he has invited Picard to attend a meeting with the caucus committee. He said the CBC vice-president has accepted and will meet with the committee Tuesday.

This is believed to be an unprecedented move. Earlier last week President George Davidson and R. G. Fraser, vice-president in charge of corporate affairs, had not heard of any invitation to appear before the Liberal caucus committee. They believed such an appearance, if a CBC spokesman did appear, would be a "first."

The crown broadcasting system is requider to appear before the parliamentary broadcasting committee when it is asked to appear. But a caucus committee is a different matter. Last week there was some doubt as to whether the CBC would have a spokesman attend to answer questions at the Liberal caucus committee.

However Picard has accepted, according to Faulkner. The parliamentary secretary to Pelletier was not surprised. He pointed out that when it was explained to Picard that the Liberal MPs had some questions about the functions of the CBC that puzzled them the vice-pesident readily agreed to attend.

Centennial Air Race Interest High

About 100 planes are expected to compete in the London-to-Victoria air race next summer, race official Harry Traynor said Friday.

The race, terminating here July 7, is one of the highlights planned to mark the B.C. Centennial. Prizes total $100,000, including a $50,000 first prize, $20,000 second prize and $10,000 third.

Traynor said pilots who want to compete should plan on spending at least $5,000 in expenses.

The finish line will be at Mile Zero on the Trans-Canada Highway at the foot of Douglas.

Bleachers will be built along Dallas Road to permit spectators to view the finish, expected at about 6:30 p.m. July 7.

The Royal Air Force is considering sending its supersonic jet aerobatic team Red Arrows to perform as part of an end-of-the-race show, Traynor said. He also indicated some member of the Royal Family will be involved with the race, although he didn't say who it would be or in what capacity.

Atheist Scout Barred

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A 16-year-old boy has been denied rank as an eagle scout, U.S. scouting's highest honor, on the ground he is an atheist. Robert Parkinson, chief executive for Narragansett Council, Boy Scouts of America, said Thursday James Clark was rejected "because he didn't believe in God."

Eat! Eat! Eat! 12 lbs. Of Fat Off In 1 Week

TORONTO—At last, a really new breakthrough in the battle of the bulge. Throw away calorie charts, carbohydrate counters, grapefruit juice, white wine, drinkers diets and other reducing fads. If you want to experience the exciting prospect of immediately losing weight effortlessly and with pure pleasure, heed the advice of a former fatty who has tried them all. After years of failing to permanently lose weight he evolved an extremely simple method of selecting foods regardless of how much you eat. Called "The Remarkable Ratio Diet"—A Super Speed Slimming and Rejuvenating System of Food Selection—it can be learned by anyone in a minute or two. In fact, the whole secret is confined to three or four pages contained in a trim pocket size booklet. Fed up to the teeth after wading through volume upon volume of heavy tomes devoted to the mysteries of nutrition and weight control, the author picked the collective brains of former heavyweights and finally hit on a method which has probably been under the noses of the experts all along. Hacking away at all the doubletalk and gobbledegook shrouding the simple facts of why most people find it difficult to lose weight, he reduced the complex columns of vitamins, calories, fats, proteins and carbohydrates down to a single factor number for each food. All you do is make your selection from those everyday foods which have a factor below the magic number of 10 and you lose weight extremely fast. So fast that you can practically see the dial of the scale move! Two to three pounds a day from the start! With this system of food selection (hardly fair to call it a diet) the results are even more remarkable when you consider no attempt is made to limit the quantity of food eaten. Now anyone who wants to get rid of excess fat permanently should forget about previous failures and write off for their copy of "The Remarkable Ratio Diet". It costs $2 from Datonic Press, Dept. 173, 257 Adelaide St. West, Toronto 2b, Ont. (Send remittance with order). All you stand to lose is your blubber. In the unlikely event you don't shed 10 to 12 pounds in the first week, you get your money back. The author says he will personally guarantee the refund if the system doesn't work for you as it did for him. (He dropped a swift 40 pounds).

Thin Ice

QUEBEC'S JUSTICE MINISTER Choquette may claim to be influenced by serious problems of crime — both political and underworld — in his province, but he has entered into a very dangerous field in proposing that citizens should carry identity cards. Such a suggestion opens up a whole nightmare of hazards to established individual rights. The very idea of identity cards is repugnant to most Canadians. The device was tolerated during wartime, but abandoned as quickly as possible.

Not only Mr. Choquette's proposal, but the words with which he supported it, send shivers through champions of the Bill of Rights and the freedom from close police surveillance which is a basic part of our national life. To the comment that the identity card plan would infringe the inherent rights of the individual, Mr. Choquette replied that "absolute freedom" belongs to an earlier time, and that Quebecers had "better get used to the idea that the police must have more adequate methods of control."

That is a sad and alarming admission to come from any government official. It says in effect that democracy has proved unable to control the anti-democratic and anti-law forces which have grown up under the freedoms which democracy guarantees. It says that to combat these forces, every member of the public must give up a part of his freedom as an individual in order to avoid losing a still greater part to anti-democratic forces.

Unfortunately, history shows that major liberties are usually lost step by step, rather than wholesale. An edict is designed to protect the public, or to preserve law and order. Then another freedom must be whittled to protect the first edict. A series of such erosions follows, along with moves to make temporary deprivations into permanent safeguards. Each step may appear plausible and necessary, as the people, to use Mr. Choquette's chilling phrase, "get used to the idea" of increased police powers. Yet the final effect can be disastrous to liberty and may take years of struggle to overcome.

Canada, in its current state of tension and quandary, is on the edge of serious problems arising not only from subversive threats to democratic practice but also from the measures that are initiated to provide protection against those threats.

We should watch very carefully to see what medicine we are offered and in what strength it is prepared, for we could become the victims of our own well-meaning attempts to protect ourselves.

South African Discontent

SOUTH AFRICA'S RECENT PROvincial elections resulted in a net gain of six seats for the Opposition United Party at the expense of the ruling National Party, but no one sees in this development a serious implication of change in South Africa's administration.

The United Party, though somewhat more liberal than the government, is also pro-apartheid. But its provincial election gains, following its national election success earlier when it took nine seats from the government, do underscore a political difficulty inflicted on the National Party.

The government called the national elections early this year in an effort to forestall any advance by its own ultra-right wing which split away from it to form the Herstigte Nasionale Party — a political grouping seeking support from those who thought the government was not tough enough in its apartheid policies. In the provincial elections, as in the national contests, the Herstigte group won no seats at all.

The results of the recent polling add one more problem to those which have plagued the party in power this year. The concept of Afrikaaner cohesiveness was shaken by the emergence of the extreme right as a political entity.

Exclusion from the Olympic Games and cancellation of the cricket tour of Britain underscored the increasing isolation being thrust upon the country — a point made physically by the expansion of Russia into the Indian Ocean and China into the railway-building field in Zambia. In addition, the United States has discouraged investments in countries friendly to South Africa. Internal labor shortages are reportedly becoming more chronic there and a growing inflation is evident.

Sooner or later South Africa will bump up against the twentieth century — or vice versa — and the government will have to face the modern facts of life in a black continent.

Slamming Shut the Imported Door

WHEN SCHOOL TRUSTEE Peter Bunn, was discussing a school building the other day, he said steel and concrete had replaced the traditional lumber because the new type of construction had certain advantages and was cheaper. He noted that the only lumber in the school was used for doors and a few cupboards. The British Columbia lumber industry, he added, was pricing itself out of the market.

Mr. Bunn's mention of doors drives his point home to the ordinary person building or remodelling a home for even in this case, the native product frequently encounters competition which makes imports more attractive.

An inexpensive Japanese mahogany door, fabricated here from imported lumber, sells for about $7.00. A comparable, though more heavily-constructed, door made from B.C. fir sells for about $14.50. It costs approximately half as much to use material shipped across the Pacific as it does to use local wood.

There was a time, in the surging development of British Columbia's trade in forest products, when operators in this province could afford higher wage costs in lumbering because their operations were so efficient. Their efficiency offset the higher wages.

Trustee Bunn—and the average purchaser of supplies here— suggests that sharper competition from outside has slammed the door on this argument—an imported Japanese mahogany door, not as heavy as a B.C. product, but good enough to meet the purchaser's need.

Ship to Shore

Through the courtesy of your newspaper, may I thank the following: Mayor Courtney Haddock; Mr. P. D. P. Holmes, president of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce; Mr. Dave Barrett leader of the NDP, and Mr. Larry Ryan Secretary of the Victoria Trades and Labor Council — all of whom accepted my invitation either to appear personally, or express in writing a sincere welcome to the captain and crew of "The People's Republic of China's grain ship Hongqi."

Also may I pay great tribute to the thousands of Victoria citizens—from all walks of life — who swarmed aboard the Hongqi on November 11, to personally show welcome and friendship towards the people of China.

But this above all — may I thank Prime Minister Trudeau and his government for establishing diplomatic recognition of Mao's China, which has ended the bitter feuding between avowed Russian-type Communist members of the Victoria Canada-China Friendship Association — and those like myself who were not.

In short, Prime Minister Trudeau's act transferred control from a small Communist dissident group into a Canada-China Friendship Association now some 20 million strong. All of which earns a big thank you. — W. A. Scott, Founding member and Hon. President, Victoria's Canada-China Friendship Association.

SMALL PROBLEM OF STARVATION

By BRUCE HUTCHISON

Nothing to Eat but Statistics and Knowledge

Hutchison

IN the year 2000 A.D., as history will record, the famous prediction of the Canadian Economic Council, made in the autumn of 1970, was triumphantly fulfilled. The nation's entire Gross National Product, all its goods, services and money, had finally been absorbed by the cost of education and medical care. Not a dollar was left for other uses; public or private. Consequently all production had ceased and the economy was paralyzed. Since they had no fuel, food or clothing most Canadians were cold and hungry.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported, however, that they were thoroughly educated and enjoyed perfect health, thanks to the university and medical services. Yet the system had a certain minor disadvantage. Though learned and healthy, all except a few hundred people already had dropped dead from starvation. This was not considered an altogether satisfactory arrangement. It seemed, perhaps, to carry the policy of population control a mite too far.

Even Louis Rasminsky, the unflappable governor of the Bank of Canada, was moved to say in his annual report that "the situation may contain negative elements deserving serious thought" and that "the current price of bread at $10,750 per ounce may appear to some members of society as somewhat excessive, though it has no direct economic importance, bread being unobtainable. Nevertheless, as a warning of possible inflation in future years such prices must be judged significant and, conceivably, undesirable."

The first change in Canadian life toward the end of the century was the disappearance of automobiles when their manufacture stopped. To the general amazement, and contrary to all the conventional wisdom the public discovered that the automobile was less essential than some other things, particularly food.

Whereas the automobile, in the decade of the 1970s, had been regarded not only as the noblest work of God, and its purchase as a true religious experience, yet the pagans of later years seemed to get along all right without it and, still more surprising, without the sacred ritual murder of some 50,000 persons annually on North American highways.

Inconvenient Hunger

Having abandoned religion, everyone walked on his own two feet and felt fine until he collapsed from hunger. Then he was carried by the government, free of charge, to the nearest university to be re-educated in the new methods of living without nourishment. But this efficient apparatus of social security also collapsed because all the professors and doctors were soon deceased.

Only the Economic Council and the members of Parliament managed to secure a minimal diet, having smuggled the cost of the parliamentary restaurant into the health department's budget, and prudently cached some canned goods in the government's secret bomb shelter near Hull. Besides, an official spokesman explained, Parliament, unlike other organs of society, was an educational institution and could be justified as a vital branch of learning.

The public, of course, never heard this explanation, because the newspapers, television and radio had folded long ago. Canada had health and education but not information, but this didn't seem to matter much, as the chairman of the CBC remarked just before he strangled on the French network and lurched into the Ottawa River.

When the 21st century dawned, Edgar Benson, then a rather old man and thinner than he used to be, announced that a white paper on economic paralysis and mass starvation would be prepared, with suitable legislation to follow two years later. Meanwhile he reminded the public that it enjoyed a uniquely fair tax system, the envy of the world, and a Just Society where all men starved equally.

It was unfortunate that Mr. Benson's latest white paper could not be printed. Rats, minor bureaucrats and some desperate cabinet ministers had eaten all the available paper, white and black, in the cellar of the Parliament Buildings. That discovery embarrassed the cabinet, but only for a moment. It pointed out that the Bill of Rights included the right to starve and freeze, and this right would never be violated except in a grave emergency which had not yet occurred. T. C. Douglas, still leading the NDP, was not impressed by the government's assurances. In his frigid mountain cave near Nanaimo, he told a wandering CBC reporter that more intensive education and better medical care would solve all the nation's problems and, as he fell into a swoon, asked the interviewer to spare him a crust, if possible. The interviewer had none and fainted, too. Thus the taped interview was lost to posterity, a tragic waste.

A few Eskimos continued to survive on their ancestral diet of seal blubber and, though lamentably uneducated and without medical care, seemed robust and happy. The professors and doctors couldn't understand it.

Stomach Obsession

Naturally, the few survivors south of the Arctic became envious of the northern natives and, with demonstrations, speeches and riots, protested racial discrimination against the white man. The Eskimos eased the tension by gifts of seal skins to the young women of Toronto, enough to make an exceedingly brief mini-skirt for each applicant, but the new fashion failed to catch on. Men appeared no longer interested in female legs, only in their own stomachs.

The hardier spirits of the day had joined roving Indian bands in the Northwest Territories and lived on game and berries. They were pursued by the department of natural revenue as tax evaders but the Mounted Police, unpaid for several years, also joined the nomads, if they were lucky.

In the end only the members of the Economic Council survived because they alone understood economics and could thrive on a simple diet of statistics. After another century they had bred a new race of economists — dull, perhaps, and quite incomprehensible to laymen, but certainly durable. So all the nation's problems were solved at last when a revised education system taught the people to grow food, cut fuel in the woods, weave cloth and stay healthy despite the government, the universities and the medical services.

FROM WASHINGTON

By JAMES RESTON

De Gaulle—'The Last of Them in the West'

THE death of Charles de Gaulle reminds one of the lovely verse by Stephen Phillips, the English poet:

O for a living man to lead!
That will not babble when we bleed;
O for the silent doer of the deed!
One that is happy in his height,
And one that in a nation's night
Hath solitary certitude of light.

All this he had and it partly explains the genuine sense of loss at his passing, even here on the Potomac, but it is not the full explanation. His "certitude" often infuriated Washington and all but broke America's faith in the common defence of Western civilization, but he had other qualities now uncommon in a world of political technicians.

He knew what he wanted, which is a rare quality in this ambiguous time. He knew the power of the word "no"; he knew when to be silent and when to speak, and he had the gifts of precision, poetry and prophecy.

Views on 'Permissiveness'

Long before we were talking about "permissiveness" and the decline of authority in the United States, he was writing: "These are hard days for authority. Current custom attacks it and legislation tends to weaken it. In the home and in the factory, in the state and in the street, it arouses impatience and criticism rather than confidence and obedience. Jostled from below whenever it shows its head, it has come to doubt itself, to feel its way, to assert itself at the wrong moment; when it is unsure, with reticence, excuses and extreme caution; when it is overconfident, harshly, roughly, and with a niggling formalism . . .

"Our contemporaries, by reason of their shifting beliefs, their academic traditions, and exhausted loyalties, have lost the sense of deference and no longer wish to observe the rules of conduct which were once firmly established . . ."

I once asked him if he really wanted to unite Europe. France will not unite Europe, he replied, and neither will Britain, nor the United States, but China will. There is the force that will bring Russia and Europe back together again. The cold war is a passing phase. America has won it in Europe and doesn't know it, but other great divisions will arise. At the end of the century, the critical tension in the world may not be ideological but racial.

If this were true, I asked, was there any other force in the world that could stand out against the pressure of China—could India do it? "India?" he asked. "India is a dust of peoples, living in misery and meditation . . . never! Impossible! . . ."

Here again the "certitude" which made him a great Frenchman, and the ranging mind thinking in generations and epochs, but was he a great statesman of the world? The historians of France may have a loftier view of this than the historians in the rest of the Western world.

Even when de Gaulle's nationalistic views were getting the American forces out of France and blocking the integration of Europe, that other Great Frenchman (and great world statesman as well), Jean Monnet, used to urge compassion for de Gaulle's views.

"You must always remember," Monnet said, "it is the living de Gaulle who speaks, but it is the dead de Gaulle who acts. You must wait and look back on it all later."

Well, that is what the world is doing now—perhaps far too soon, and in French terms it may be that Monnet was right. In his brave and dangerous liberation of Algeria, de Gaulle undoubtedly allied himself with the historic liberation of the overseas territories.

He may very well have been right in his assumption that the United States would never risk atomic destruction in the defence of France, and therefore that France must keep an independent atomic force of its own. But while he knew what he wanted, he wanted too many contradictory things: glory without power, strength without allied unity; equality without size; "a nation of heroes and saints" in a world of scoundrels.

It was easy to understand many of his longings. He hated this big, clattering, homogenized world. His writings were full of the old noble words—honor, dignity, sacrifice, independence, courage and grandeur—and naturally enough, he resented the fact that Europe, the common home of Dante and Goethe, the centre of the political and cultural world for a thousand years, should be dominated by those two clumsy giants, the United States and the Soviet Union.

Gap Unbridged

Still somehow romance and reality never quite came together in his policies, and even the other Western allies were never willing to exchange American influence and power, which irritated but protected them, for French poetry and politics, which also irritated but did not protect them.

What he did, above all question, was to restore the pride of a defeated nation, and to bring the voice of France back into the highest councils of the world. He made the masses of his fellow countrymen believe in him, though he believed more in authority than democracy and didn't quite believe in them.

Nobody is really going to weep for the bad old days of the two world wars. They produced unspeakable horrors, which make our present struggles seem almost bearable, but they did produce some spectacular men, and de Gaulle was the last of them in the West.

Nature Rambles

By FREEMAN KING

Visitors who went to Goldstream a relatively few days ago to see the salmon run and found no fish can see them now.

Release of millions of gallons by the water board galvanized the waiting spawners in the tidal pools and sent them on their way upstream. Four hours after the increased flow started, some had reached the Finlayson Bridge and on Monday morning thousands of fish were in the river. Some of the coho had progressed to the upper pools at the campsite and were spawning on the gravel bars. As the coho entered the fresh water, they turned red, indicating a readiness to spawn. Had they remained in salt water much longer, they would have perished without spawning.

The chum salmon too were moving in, taking advantage of the fresh, fast-flowing water.

The stream itself seemed to take a new lease on life, for where the water ran over the stones it sang its song of freedom. The leaves that were held against the stones danced downstream carrying with them many life-giving substances to the tiny inhabitants of the stream.

Even the little "dipper" had a wonderful time as it darted in and out of the water, for it, too, was able to find food carried downstream. The kingfishers seemed to lose their shyness in spite of groups of people along the stream.

In the lower pools the gulls, which had been waiting to feed on the dead fish, moved in and were able to find some that had died, "hung-up" and unable to make their run.

No doubt because of the publicity there were thousands who visited the stream on Sunday last.

The young and the elderly, in groups and singly, all made the pilgrimage to see the return of the salmon to the place of their birth.

All seemed concerned and expressed the hope that the flow of water would continue so that other fish could come in to fulfill their destiny, and that the eggs would still be covered and not dry out and be lost.

De Gaulle Tried to Live Own Vision

By NORA BELOFF and WILLIAM MILLINSHIP

Straddling the history of our time for some 30 years, Charles de Gaulle will be remembered with awe rather than affection.

He had retired from politics after his unsuccessful referendum early last year, and his death will make little practical difference to the France of his successor, Georges Pompidou.

But many will regret that there will be no final volume of his memoirs—though the volume (1958-62) which has just appeared shows a mental decline and is more revealing for what it suppressed than for what it tells. The general died while still making his case for posterity.

Unique Specimen

There was nobody more interested in the de Gaulle phenomena than himself: He once confessed that he took a little time off each day to examine his place in history. He must be the unique specimen of the man who invented his own vision of the hero-martyr-patriot in his earliest youth and then spent the rest of his life living up to it.

This vision was truly conservative in the fundamental sense of clinging to the old tradition and hierarchy. De Gaulle's political attitudes were set in their final groove before the First World War.

It is true that his sharp, analytical mind made him quickly aware of technical changes, notably in weaponry, and part of his brilliance lay in his supreme capacity to understand and respond to the shifts in the domestic or international balance of power.

But the fundamentally nationalist vision of human society remained with him throughout his life, and it was hard not to suspect that he would have been more at home in an earlier age.

With a style and personality to match the heroic scale of Churchill, Stalin and Roosevelt, he came to look out of place in a time of low profile diplomacy and inter-dependence, like the sole survivor of an otherwise extinct species of giant.

The oddness was accentuated by the contrast between the concern of most political leaders with bread-and-butter problems such as balance of payments and growth rates and de Gaulle's obsession with national sovereignty, independence and grandeur.

Even his style of oratory was faintly archaic. He seemed to reign over France instead of merely governing it. He deliberately hedged himself about with ceremonial and protocol, and kept his ministers—even his prime ministers—in the dark about major policy decisions.

His visits to the French provinces were organized like regal progresses: At least once he was invited to lay his hands on a sick child at the roadside, as if he had some royal gift of healing.

But, if he had more in common with the style of Louis XIV than with that of his more recent predecessors, he felt that his destiny was most closely parallelled by that of Joan of Arc. Like the maid, he presumed to "save" France at a moment of great crisis, and it was hardly less absurd that an acting two-star general and junior minister should claim to represent France in 1940 than that a peasant girl should offer to drive the English out of 15th-century France.

Charles de Gaulle did not hear voices as she did, but he had his own dream of France. He saw her, he tells us in his memoirs, as "a fairy-tale princess . . . created by providence for complete successes of exemplary misfortunes." If she failed to live up to "this certain idea of France," the fault lay with the French, not with "the genius of the fatherland."

He dedicated his life to the service of this vision rather than of the French people. He identified himself almost in a mystical way with France, but to him the country was an historical idea, not a group of human beings.

Higher Interest

His mission was to serve "the higher interest of France" and this was "something other than the immediate advantage of Frenchmen."

In a curious way, he despised the French, but accepted their cheers and their votes as the votes of eternal France.

The best way to understand de Gaulle is through his upbringing.

His conventional Roman Catholic family was poor and his father a school teacher, but there was an impressive pedigree of judges, teachers, historians and soldiers through the ages and he inherited a brilliantly perceptive, though not an original, mind.

As a boy, Charles grew too fast and his conspicuous height earned him the nickname of 'Asparagus', helping to isolate him from the other children. He was certainly a lonely child, and it was at least in part self-enforced isolation; it seems that he studied the destiny of great men whose exceptional qualities separated them from their fellows.

The mystique of the nation-state as the supreme repository of human endeavor, and the need for its embodiment in a single leader, were not, of course, ideas invented by the general. He grew up at the height of the imperialist struggles between the big European powers, with jingoism at its zenith and being made respectable by high-sounding, philosophical doctrines.

There was a good deal of the German philosopher Nietzsche in the superman de Gaulle created and became. Yet, perhaps because of his Catholic upbringing, de Gaulle always resisted the extreme implications of Nietzsche leading to totalitarianism and fascism.

In his first book in 1924, "Discord Among Our Enemies," he attributed the German defeat to the Nietzschean theories of violence and passion and contrasted it with the modern restraint symbolized in a French garden, with its sense of harmony, equilibrium and balance.

His conservatism was tempered by realism. All through his life he went on believing that the 1789 French Revolution was a vast mistake.

Frenchmen who were with him in London after the 1940 defeat remembered that he took exception to their plan to put on the masthead of the Free French newspaper: "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity" on the grounds that it would divide the nation.

Restore Stability

And in his memoirs he reaffirms that his object in returning to power in 1958 was to restore to the French state "the stability and continuity of which it has been deprived for 169 years"—in fact, since the French Revolution.

Yet the general never tried to push France further to the right than it would go. All through his rule, with consummate moderation, patience and skill he chopped and changed his policies and his alliances, playing off one side against another and thus managing to remain in power for 11 uninterrupted years, whereas the previous average of French leadership since the war had been 18 months.

'Hero-martyr-patriot'

The story of Charles de Gualle will not be complete until the postcript of the succession has been written. But, however dubious his legacy, this strange, fascinating man dwarfed the other political leaders of his period and became a legend in his lifetime. Whatever he did, he did with rare flair and style, and he twice took command of his country in dramatic circumstances that will not be quickly forgotten.

"Always," Winston Churchill said of him, "Even when he was behaving worst, he seemed to express the personality of France—a great nation, with all its pride, authority and ambition."

There May Be Too Many People in Canada Already

By JOHN MIKA

OTTAWA — Is Canada over-populated already?

It may sound like a laughable question but a growing number of government and university scientists and economists think the answer may be no joke.

And politicians are beginning to sit up and take notice of their urgings that the very least the question needs — right away — is some serious study.

First of two articles

But surely, with 3.5 million square miles of countryside, a population of 21 million Canadians is only a drop in the bucket compared with the teeming masses of India and China, isn't it?

No it isn't, say most population experts. They argue such comparisons are as misleading as thinking you can get five basketballs into a bucket built for 20 golfballs. New York, for instance, has a lower population density but much more congestion than a generation ago.

The fundamental difference they suggest is that North Americans — who use more of everything and waste more — have an impact on the environment up to 50 times greater than people in underdeveloped countries.

And the further north you go from the equator, the less stable is the ecosystem and therefore the less able environment is to withstand the multiplying impact of modern man.

Thus, while the old Malthusian view of unrestricted population growth outstripping food production resources may still haunt the agrarian societies, the new spectre of unrestricted consumption growth outstripping waste disposal capacities is beginning to stalk the technological nations.

On this basis — relative impact on the environment and not just mere numbers — Canada's population already:

"Is the equivalent of at least 100 million people in India, by the most conservative calculation;

"Or, when you consider the high raw resource extraction for export may be as high as the equivalent of almost 1 billion people, about the same as the population of China, according to the most pessimistic calculations."

Those claims mark the range of anxiety felt by Zoology Prof. R. C. Plowright, of the University of Toronto, who recently urged a Commons committee studying pollution problems to recommend evaluation of an "optimum population" target for Canada through research and public debate.

"There exists a widely-held belief that though the world as a whole faces a very serious threat from population growth, Canada somehow is isolated from this problem," he observed in an interview. "This is a very dangerous misconception."

Prof. Plowright believes Canada already is over-populated as evidenced by the attrition of wilderness area and diminishing wildlife species.

He admits that optimum population figures depend on subjective criteria "because it depends on what quality of life you want."

But he also points to the objective irony of the "recent discovery that the average lifespan has begun declining in southern California, apparently because of smog and other pollution" where the human floodtide originally raced to enjoy longer and better lives because of environment.

Prof. Plowright believes Canada is racing toward the same fate and it can only be averted if a national consensus decides quickly what our optimum population should be to achieve the desired "quality of life" so that immigration and family sizes could be adjusted.

To underline the urgency he feels, he told the committee that even if the nation undertook a complete population stabilization program next year — cutting off immigration and reducing family size to an average of 2.2 children — Canada's population would continue rising for 75 years until it hit a peak of about 33 million.

That's because there are so many young in the country today who would add to the total number of parents as they grew and married.

But, without a stabilization program, current growth rates are expected to double the population to 42 million by the end of this century and boost it to approach 100 million within 75 years.

Prof. Plowright's obsession with speed is based partly on the realistic assessment that reaching a national consensus necessarily will be difficult and protracted.

If curtailment of the present 2 per cent annual growth rate (about evenly divided between natural increase and immigration) is set as a national goal, he advocates a two-stage formula for slowing it down to zero population growth eventually.

First, he would permit abortion on demand ("it's proven itself an effective tool in other countries"), step up family planning advice and free availability of contraceptives, eliminate the "baby bonus" allowance and dependent children tax deduction, and reduce immigration flows.

If these "permissive" measures didn't work well enough, he would add incentives — such as special grants to encourage adoptions as well as tax deductions for small families and childless couples or single persons — and consider cutting off immigration to a trickle.

Prof. Plowright maintains that only by setting a target and then working to achieve it rationally will Canadians be able to avoid the undesirable form of population control by which government some day would dictate compulsory limits on family size to avoid an imminent catastrophe.

The committee was about equally divided between MPs who believed his reasoning was sound and his warning apt and those who obviously thought them the inept and far-fetched mouthings of a young academic.

But, within a couple of days, they were reading reports of the same message coming from an unexpected source — Prince Philip in Buckingham Palace.

Warning that the quality of human life and every survival of wildlife were at stake, the duke strongly urged policies be undertaken to stabilize population by curbing the birthrate to the 2.2-per-family average.

In his own inimitable fashion, the royal father of four pointed out little sacrifice would be entailed since most couples "haven't gone out of their way to get (a third child) and the fourth is usually unintentional."

Gathering Winter Few-yoo-ell

By ART STOTT

One of my distinguished friends, whose writings have won him acclaim and honors here and abroad, turns his facile talents occasionally from the analysis of domestic and world crises to the simpler, homey matters of life in the country. As a woodcutter of long standing, he has frequently noted the double benefits drawn by the man who saws and splits his own fuel.

Such a man, he says, is warmed first by the healthy physical activity of cutting his wood, second by the glow it sends out from his fireplace. There is a third warmth also — of satisfaction derived by the individual who can prove this degree of self-sufficiency in a society so dependent on technology that the primitive cross-cut is becoming obsolete, and the man who uses one, obsolete with his tool.

I have drawn solace from my distinguished friend's philosophy on wood-cutting since the activity is an inescapable symbiosis of the incurable disease of beachcombing in our parts. The philosophy retains relative validity even though, passing his country estate on a warm evening this summer, I saw him on the patio, lime cordial in hand, discussing weighty affairs with learned friends while the snarl of a chain saw in younger hands echoed from the timber stand behind his lodge.

Defense of the philosophy, however, can demand resolution from a beach-comber.

Like the peasant in Good King Wenceslas, I went the other day gathering winter few-yoo-ell. This year the task is less desolating than last. Victoria, after great talk and high planning, adopted a 1970 project to rid Gonzales Beach of logs. Never had the annual debate produced a more promising plan. And seldom in the last half century has the beach been more log-littered and battle-scarred than this year. It seems that you just can't talk the logs off the beach. They're deaf.

But the profusion of timber yields, as a fringe benefit, a larger selection of wood. The alder scarcity of 1969 has ended.

So from its resting place on jagged tidal rocks I pried an alder, seven inches at one end, a foot across at the other and some 25 feet in length. It wasn't easy. Most beachcombers have two hands and it's difficult to push down with them on a pry and slide in a prop at the same time. When the genetic engineers hit their stride, I'm going to suggest that future beachcombers be equipped with at least three hands — which may look odd but will (ignore the unintended pun) be handy.

With pike pole and lead rope I sheperded the stick around to my slip through the medium chop splashing on the shore. A medium chop spashing shin-high on a beachcomber eliminates the warmth the philosopher attributes to the whole operation. True, no snow lay round about, deep and crisp and even, but then snow can't compete with Foul Bay water as a chill factor.

Even the arduous task of winching the unwilling log up the slip failed to provide anything but semantic warmth. Sweat, yes, but cooled by the winds over the November strait.

Under such conditions, a beach-comber can look forward to the glow he anticipates when, his log finally lying above the threat of the waves, he lays his saw across the trunk. My distinguished philosophical friend has also remarked on the superior merits of a Swede buck saw for such surgery — himself having come late in life to the Swede bucksaw after a youth and early manhood devoted to a heavy, two-handed crosscut.

I recognize the virtues of a Swede. It does, however, tend to stick when the wood binds. Now a short-tempered man can work up quite a lot of verbal heat when his blade is firmly vised in a log. But the exercise is singularly unproductive of higher body temperature.

Sustained, nevertheless, by the philosophy of the whole thing, I gnawed off, block by block, a supply of alder which should last through the Christmas week, packed it up steps that grow steeper each year, and limped eventually indoors, my flabby muscles protesting against the indignities to which they had been subjected.

Still, I now have a small stack of alder, weathering and, hopefully, dripping some of its mosture onto the ground. By the anniversary of Good King Wenceslas' last look out, it should be combustible.

By then my joints may have regained something better than their present creaky, rusty articulation, and I may be able to move without a groan.

When guests join me before the glowing hearth, I'll be able to tell them — as I have often told them before — about alder brought in by the sea. The salt water, I'll say, effects a sort of curing process. The tide delivers the stuff. Just a small matter of hauling it up, whipping through it with a Swede bucksaw, toting it up and voila! Warming little chore, I tell them, warms you while you harvest it, warms you while you burn it. Just one of the bonuses you get from waterfront living.

That's what I'll tell them, wondering to myself what Baron Munchausen had that I lack.

Resolution Would End Hospitals for Profit

By BRUCE YEMEN
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — The Social Credit party Friday supported an Oak Bay constituency resolution which in effect would put profit-making private hospitals out of business in the long-term future.

The convention also backed another resolution, inspired by Oak Bay MLA Dr. Scott Wallace, which would involve the provincial government in helping pay the costs of all patients in such hospitals.

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark indicated he has "confidence" that finance minister Bennett will find a way to help such intermediate care patients who, unlike extended and acute care patients, fail to qualify for a dollar a day hospital care.

Without debate, the convention passed an Oak Bay resolution, originally proposed by Wallace, to the effect that the government should have as a long-term aim the principle that "all hospitals be operated by non-profit agencies."

But another idea first put forward by the Oak Bay MLA during the past legislative session was defeated in the form of a resolution from the Vancouver Centre association.

It called for an increase in the dollar a day hospital insurance rate to three dollars a day as a means of raising badly needed health funds.

Loffmark spoke against the move, saying it required agreement among the provinces. Wallace, in an attempt to reply to Loffmark, was greeted by the tinkling of water-glasses, a sign that delegates disagreed with him and wanted him to sit down.

The Esquimalt Social Credit group won support for a resolution calling for tertiary treatment to replace raw sewage outfalls into the ocean. The resolution referred specifically to the dumping of 12 million gallons daily into the ocean at Macaulay Point.

Ecology Centre Proposed

Times Staff

VANCOUVER — Resources Minister Ray Williston made a plea Friday for the federal government centennial grant to B.C. to be applied to an environmental control centre.

Williston wouldn't commit the provincial government to a specific contribution to the project but said $10 million from Ottawa would go a long way to setting up a physical facility for such a centre.

The $10 million federal centennial grant for 1971 celebrations has $7 million still uncommitted to a specific project. Williston said B.C. would contribute to such a project.

Williston told 500 delegates to the Social Credit party annual convention that there could be no better use for the centennial money than to set up an environmental centre for research and testing. He said the provincial cabinet land use committee will become an environment committee and officers of various government departments, such as forest rangers and mining inspectors, would become part of a government environment team.

Protection of a "quality environment" would be carried out at the field level by such officers who would supply information to a central co-ordinating facility, Williston said.

Williston indicated that polluters would bear a share of the operation costs of an environment control centre, which might be located in the university endowment lands in Vancouver.

Law Clinic Quickly Popular

Victoria's Neighborhood Free Law Clinic, two weeks old, has advised 76 people since it opened Nov. 2.

The clinic is a pilot project of the Victoria Bar Association aiming to determine legal aid requirements in Greater Victoria.

Of those visiting the clinic at 1290 Gladstone, 33 showed up Monday night between 6:30 and 9 p.m.

Law student Michael Hutchison said 15 people were waiting outside Monday when the clinic opened for the evening. He said most inquiries were about criminal matters, though many people had questions about marital family and landlord-tenant problems.

Hutchison said the only major difference in the inquiries at the second clinic was an increase in the number of questions about criminal matters.

"Out of the two weeks, we had nine cased followed up by the staff, and one has resulted in a court appearance," he said.

The clinic is open Monday evenings until people stop showing up with questions. This week, students Hutchison, Bruce Macfarlane and Mohan Jawl, and lawyers D. R. Wilson, Paul Bundom and William Hitch attended.

Hutchison said the clinic may be attracting only the kind of person who can drive or be driven to the office. The Victoria Bar Association may set up another clinic in the Victoria West district.

NEED EXISTS

The Family and Children's Service has suggested that a need for legal aid exists in Vic West, expecially for family problems.

Hutchison said family problems are not wholly a matter for counselling, because they can involve legal rights.

The Victoria Bar Association continues to give legal aid on Wednesdays at the Law Courts Building at 5 p.m. Hutchison said advice at the courthouse is primarily for civil law matters.

The Neighborhood Free Law Clinic, he said, gives advice on other aspects of law as well as civil law.

Lawyers at the Gladstone clinic will occassionally follow up a case. But this is not the rule, Hutchison said, because the clinic does not exist to provide free lawyers.

He said many cases in the last two weeks were able to be handled without the services of a lawyer once the inquirer understood how to solve his problem.

Others, he said, discovered that they were able to afford lawyers' services.

"Most people can have their problems solved by telling them how to do it themselves," he said.

The Neighborhood Free Legal Clinic is not the first of its kind in British Columbia. Vancouver's Inner City Project has a legal aid division, Hutchison said, similar to Victoria's clinic.

The clinic does not supplant existing legal aid services, but complements them, Hutchison said.

Housing Construction Starts

Construction on a 36-unit condominium for middle-income families got underway this week in Sidney.

Located in the 10,000 block Fifth St., the two-storey, three-bedroom complex is designed for families in the $5,000 to $9,000 income bracket.

Being built by Peninsula Housing Resources Ltd., and Patterson Construction Ltd., the units will be ready about Feb. 15. They will cost $15,000 each, with $750 down on a 20 to 40-year mortgage.

Six of the units have already been spoken for, according to project manager, Francisco Carlos Belegente.

Units will be provided with carpeting, double-plumbing and electric heating. Underground wiring is a feature. The buildings will have a two-tone ranch-wall exterior and grounds will be landscaped.

Parking space for Sidney's first condominium will be provided at the rate of "one and a third car per owner," which Belegente says "is more than any other similar complex in Victoria."

Communist System 'Viable'

WINNIPEG (CP) — Mainland China, North Korea and North Vietnam are "profoundly free and democratic societies," says a journalist who spent three months this summer travelling through them.

Robert Scheer, former editor-in-chief of Ramparts, a left-wing magazine published in San Francisco, described his trip as "a startling experience" and told about 500 University of Manitoba students Friday that these Communist societies offer a "viable alternative" to the civilization of North America.

Scheer was one of an 11-member group headed by Eldridge Cleaver, a founder and leader of the Black Panther Party, which participated in the Asian junket.

Scheer said no Americans had visited Red China since the cultural revolution and none had been to North Korea since the Korean War prior to his group's visit.

"We were amazed at the life style, the quality of life . . . people there have all the necessities of life and can liberate their energies to help people," he told an approving audience which gave him a loud ovation at the end of his speech.

He said he found the people of China fascinating, more sensual and more interesting.

Student Ombudsman Plan Working Well

TORONTO (CP) — Thomas Adamchick, believed to be Ontario's first student ombudsman, has proved so successful he has been given an associate.

The 23-year-old, who has been ombudsman at the University of Ottawa since September, will be assisted by Lucette Carpentier, a graduate student in linguistics.

In addition, he said in an interview Friday, 10 secretaries, all volunteers, staff his office on a rotating basis so that someone is always on duty each day from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Mr. Adamchick, a student at the university working on his bachelor of education degree, was hired by the student federation to launch the office.

He stressed that although he is paid his $20-a-week salary by the federation — "it just covers expenses" — he feels completely independent of the student government.

"I could handle an appeal against the student federation," he said.

As ombudsman he encounters almost every problem known to students.

Much of his work is referral. For example, students phone, requesting psychiatric help and they are referred to the university psychiatrist. In emergencies the ombudsman will set up an immediate appointment.

Mr. Adamchick spent three years studying for the priesthood and then decided against it. He has spent three summers working for the youth and recreation branch of the Ontario department of education.

He has written reports on recreation programs in various towns served by the Belleville office of the branch.

RUNAWAY CAR VICTIM NAMED

Saanich police have released the name of a six-year-old boy, killed Thursday night in an accident at his home.

The victim was Robert Hilborn, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Hilborn of 3924 Woodhaven Drive.

The boy was killed when he tried to get out of a runaway car as it rolled down the driveway at his home. He was caught between the door and the body of the car when it hit a tree.

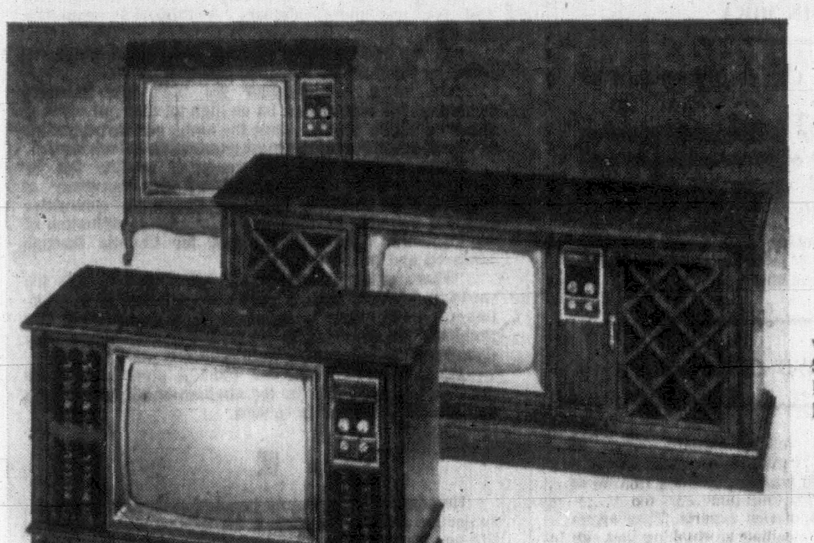
You may be too late to have the first color television on your street, but you're just in time for the best.



Perhaps you haven't bought color television because you haven't seen what you really want. Perhaps you've worried about tuning clear color. Or you've been fearful of the high costs of servicing. Well, now is the time to look again. Because we at Sylvania have just what you've been waiting for. And we'd like to tell you all about it.

New Dimensional Color makes 'true to life' viewing a reality

Take our 'true to life' dimensions. We've revised our screen height to screen width ratio to coincide exactly with that of television cameras. So now Sylvania shows all that the camera intended. And you never miss a thing.

To give you 'true to life' color, we've added a wrap-around "black composite" for very high contrast. And other special elements for a definite brightness advantage. It is this brightness, contrast combination that makes Sylvania's new dimensional picture tube the sharpest ever seen.

Fourteen leading television manufacturers use Sylvania picture tubes. So we must be doing something right.

Perfect tuning is now automatic

We do however ask you to tune each channel the first time. But only the first time. After that, our Memory Fine Tuning device goes to work. It locks in your perfect choice and automatically remembers it for you everytime thereafter.

Automatic Fine Tuning also includes a Deluxe 3-Stage Video IF Amplifier for more pleasing sound. A Keyed Automatic Gain Control that keeps the contrast uniform even in difficult reception areas. And an Automatic Degaussing Unit that purifies the color as soon as the set warms-up. Warm-up, by the way, takes only five seconds or less with new Instant Color.

Finally, Automatic Fine Tuning continuously adjusts to a station's carrier signal. So Sylvania always gives you the strongest possible reception. Automatically, of course.

Gibraltar' Chassis eliminates heat and power overload problems

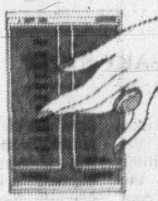
We've designed out these two major causes of television failure by designing in two new features.

First is a special Line Voltage Control. This little switch at the back of our set enables you to choose the best voltage for your area.

And the second is really a first. To the industry, that is. As a matter of fact we're very proud of our High Voltage Tripler. It's one solid state device that eliminates two most troublesome receiving tubes. And two pretty hot ones at that.

So Sylvania runs cooler now. On a lot less power.

Sylvania has more bright ideas



If you don't like the idea of twisting UHF and VHF dials, you'll like our Style 4C647. Instant Pushbutton Tuning makes it the right Sylvania for you.

Or perhaps you'd like us to take you one step further. Chairside Color Control lets you operate the whole Sylvania show from the comfort of your favorite chair. Can you think of a better place?

We also have a chassis for people who prefer their color television with no tube but the picture tube. Sylvania viewing is even more reliable the Gibraltar solid state way.

And if you choose a 26" Sylvania you can take perfect flesh tones for granted. New Perma Tint locks them in and eliminates the annoying greens from the picture.

We think these ideas will help you enjoy Sylvania even more. But then, we let you have the final say.

Sylvania is the best color protection in the business

A nice thing about our warranty is the easy-to-follow question and answer format. But the best thing is the manner in which we take care of you.

A full five year plan covers the picture tube and all solid state devices. Everything else is protected for one year. And you needn't worry about replacement parts. They're guaranteed for the balance of the warranty period.

We're not a manufacturer who's afraid to mention breakdowns. They happen because a color television is a highly complex piece of machinery. Besides, a Sylvania color television is going to last a very long time.

Realizing today's problems of repair and subsequent high costs, we've created our own coast-to-coast service organization. Our factory-trained personnel will be easily accessible. They will do whatever has to be done quickly, at a low cost.

A Sylvania color television will be easy to service. We designed it that way.

The finest quality comes at the best price

Sylvania will save you some annoying expenses. Like government import duties and international shipping costs. For these two reasons as well as being able to give you more personal attention, we make our complete line of portable, table and console models right here in Canada. But only to the exact specifications established for our award-winning line in the U.S.

So there's no question about quality. Which you now know comes at the best price. And with that our story ends.

Except you haven't seen our Sylvania color television yet. We suggest you look for it at your dealer's now. And test our color against every other one there. We think you'll agree that Sylvania is just what you've been waiting for. And more.

Anti-Pollution Moves Alarm U.K. Ship Firms

By KEN KELLY
Canadian Press Science Writer

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's anti-pollution measures for the Arctic and other coastal waters have alarmed British shipping interests, Lord Kennet, chairman of the British Committee on oil pollution of the seas, said Friday.

However, the shippers should realize that the legislation passed or before Parliament is only permissive. Any real punch would be in regulations to be enacted later by the federal cabinet.

And the shippers "will be consulted on the regulations," he said shortly before returning to Britain after talks here with Transport Minister Don Jamieson and government officials.

Discussions centred on the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act passed at the last session and the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, now before a Commons committee.

The legislation should be looked at against the background of Canada's failure earlier this year to convince the shipping nations to agree to tougher anti-pollution measures, Lord Kennet said.

Canada "then took a bold decision to jump a couple of hundred miles ahead of the pack, hoping everyone will join them."

He said a lot will depend on Canada's proposed arctic shipping conference and whether the kind of protective steps in the Canadian legislation can be put under an "international umbrella."

It was clear that something is going to be done within four or five years about sea pollution.

"My personal view is that it should be done as quickly and as internationally as possible."

Lord Kennet, a former junior minister in the Labor government responsible for environmental affairs, said Britain was unenthusiastic about NATO sea pollution talks two weeks ago "probably because we are in a slightly schizophrenic state" on the whole issue.

INTERESTS CONFLICT

Not only has Britain a lot of sea coast that could be fouled by sea pollution but there are very large shipping interests there.

He said it is natural that Canada be out in front on controls with a long coastline but relatively little shipping of her own.

The committee Lord Kennet heads is a non-political body composed of local authorities, hotel and resort owners, wildlife protection agencies and, as observers, the oil and shipping companies.

"A pressure group," he said. He will report his findings to the committee "to help them make up their minds which way to push the British government."

Obscenity Crackdown Target Named

TORONTO (CP) — The Globe and Mail says Gordon McAuslane, a book distributor once jailed for possession of obscene literature, is the target of a summer-long police crackdown on local bookstores.

The Globe identifies Mr. McAuslane, 39, as "the man behind Bookazine Enterprises Ltd., Toronto" which owns five book and poster stores in Toronto and one each in the Ontario centres of Oshawa, Peterborough, St. Catharines and Kitchener.

Since May the Metropolitan Toronto police morality squad has carried out repeated obscenity raids on Bookazine stores, as well as independent operators, arrested about 30 store clerks, and seized 72,000 books.

Insp. John Wilson, head of the morality squad, and his officers, have consistently refused to discuss any aspect of the obscenity crackdown.

Blind Get Own Walk Signal

VANCOUVER — A "Walk—Don't Walk" signal near Canadian National Institute for the Blind headquarters has been equipped with a two-tone horn for the benefit of blind pedestrians.

The audible signal was installed at the request of the CNIB after one blind person was knocked down crossing the intersection of Main and 36th Ave., while others had close calls.

DOES THE HIGH COST OF DYING OFFEND YOU?

Are you one of the thoughtful ones who is concerned that your relatives may be swept with emotion into paying hundreds too much for your funeral, when such money could be put to far better use among the living? Are you disturbed by costly caskets, displaying of remains, etc.? Would you like to sit down in complete privacy with a form we will mail you, and record NOW exactly what type of funeral or memorial service you would like . . . whether you wish friends to send flowers or donate to a charity of your choice . . . whether you would like to donate your eyes or other tissue to help the living? Would you like to see MAXIMUM funeral costs in print, instead of MINIMUMS? Then get our folder. This is not a society for the poor. It is a society for the THOUGHTFUL . . . in all walks of life.

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles, heir to the throne, is 22 today.

The prince and his sister, 20-year-old Princess Anne, are weekend guests of the Marquess and Marchioness of Salisbury at Hatfield House. The marquess is head of the Cecil family, which has been close to the throne since the days of Queen Elizabeth I in the 16th century.

LONDON TABLOID ANNIVERSARY

Brash Fleet Street Miracle Gaining

By JOHN LeBLANC

LONDON (CP) — The brash and busty tabloid Sun newspaper is coming up to its first birthday as Fleet Street's latest survival miracle.

Not only has Australian Rupert Murdoch's titillating new paper not submerged under the relentless competition here, but The Sun now says it is in the black and taking circulation away from established rivals.

The Sun will be a year old Tuesday. This time last year many were predicting that by now it either would have folded or would be deeply milking multi-millionaire Murdoch's enormously profitable News of the World, a major sex-and-scandal weekly.

As it is, circulation has zipped up to a claimed daily 1,780,000—unaudited—against something like 650,000 when the tabloid was established to supplant the sinking standard-size Sun.

A combination of sex, sport and fairly solid news coverage for a tabloid—with lots of lack of coverage in female illustrations—has helped boost The Sun into a position of survival, a tough proposition in about the toughest street of newspaper survival in the world.

When Murdoch took over the original and ailing Sun—at the giveaway price of £50,000 ($125,000)—it was losing money at the rate of more than £1 million ($2.5 million) a year and had cost the Internation Publishing Corp., more than £12 million during its eight-year life.

The paper has had a peculiar career as a more or less legitimate descendant of the rickety Daily Herald, the defunct organ of the Labor party.

When the IPC beat out Canadian Roy Thomson—now Lord Thomson—for control of the huge Odhams Press in 1964, it inherited The Herald as part of the heterogenous grab-bag.

The IPC promised to keep the Labor voice alive for five years; changed its name to The Sun; gave it one of the most brilliant staffs on Fleet Street, and then watched it gradually sink below the horizon for reasons no one has ever quite fathomed. It was one of the better "national" papers but couldn't catch the mass readership needed to keep it alive.

Nor has anyone quite figured out just why the new Sun is rising as fast as it has and stealing circulation from such tabloids as The Sketch and the mass-circulation Daily Mirror, whose sales have dropped to below 4.5 million from 5 million plus at the time Murdoch moved in on The Sun.

The Sun peels down its female models for miscellaneous sociological studies in the nude. But then so does The Mirror. The Sun has normally six sports pages, more than any of the tabloids, which may help. But then there's no accounting for British readers' tastes.

Sun editor Larry Lamb, 41, a former "splash" sub-editor on The Mirror with responsibility for its main headlines, just says: "We try harder."

22 years of hard labour for $1999.

This year, everybody's introducing a new economy car.

"Volkswagen-sized."

"Volkswagen-priced."

So not to be outdone, we've done the same.

Except, of course, we didn't have to start from scratch.

For years, while everybody else has been jumping from model to model and worrying about looks, we've stuck with our original and improved the way it works.

And so today, while ours may not look like the newest economy car, it's actually the most advanced.

It's the only one with a sealed steel bottom. To protect its insides against everything outside, including time.

The only one with an air-cooled engine. To eliminate boiling over and freezing up.

And the only one with a free electronic diagnostic system. To spot trouble early and help extend its life.

And this year, along with everything else, it also happens to be the lowest priced car you can buy that comes with a 1600 c.c. engine.

So even if it doesn't look the newest, maybe now it looks the best.

Great Pacific Buys General Mobile Firm

VANCOUVER (CP) — Sale of General Mobile Accommodations of New Westminster to Great Pacific Industries Ltd. of Vancouver has been announced in a joint statement.

The purchase was for cash, but details were not disclosed.

GMA, which specializes in supplying accommodation for institutional, educational and industrial markets, had annual sales last year of more than $1 million.

Great Pacific also announced the formation of the GPI modular division, integrating all manufacturing and marketing activities of the company's wholly-owned subsidiaries — Porta-Built Industries, Porta-Built Leasing, Fabco Leasing, and GMA.

Westcoast Launches $13 Million Suit

VANCOUVER (CP) — Westcoast Transmission Ltd. started a $13 million damage action Thursday in British Columbia supreme court against Canadian Phoenix Steel and Pipe Ltd. of Edmonton.

Westcoast claims damages for alleged failure of pipes in a pipeline running from gasfields in northeastern B.C. to its processing plant at Fort Nelson.

It alleges failures occurred in the 48-mile line which required it to take alternate measures for gas delivery.

CANADA'S EXPORTS GAIN 14%

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's strong export performance this year persisted through October, despite a slowdown in shipments to the United States.

Preliminary estimates published this week by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics valued October exports at $1,454 million, up by $105 million or 7.8 per cent from October, 1969.

That raised the total for the first 10 months of the year to $13,945 million, 14 per cent more than the $12,228 million reported in the same stretch of last year.

Kelly Douglas

Kelly, Douglas and Co. Ltd. reports sales of $156 million in the 36 weeks ended Sept. 5, a 10.52 per cent increase over sales in the same period last year.

Profit for the period was $1.28 million or 48 cents a share, a 46.82 per cent increase over last year.

U.S. Plans New Look at Oil Import Curbs

WASHINGTON (WP) — Government officials said Friday that they were prepared to suspend controls imposing limits on the import of oil, if convinced that such controls are being utilized as a device to raise prices.

The administration announced Thursday night, following a crude oil price increase by the Gulf Oil Corp. and the Atlantic Richfield Co., that it would investigate the increase, which could cost motorists about one cent a gallon more for gasoline.

Although Economic Council Chairman Paul W. McCracken said he would play "a major role" in the study, officials emphasized that the investigation did not signal a broad acceptance of "jawboning," or return to a wage-price guidepost policy of any kind.

"You can't infer from this that we're moving towards an 'incomes policy,'" a member of the economic council said, "although we are somewhat more open-minded (than we were before)."

Since the election, a new debate has been going on within the administration on the need for an "incomes policy," a loose phrase meaning government pressure on management and labor to moderate wage and price demands.

It can cover anything from "jawboning" (presidential or official statements urging moderation) or something more formal, such as the wage-price guidepost policy as practiced during the Kennedy-Johnson administrations. Pressure to increase supplies is also considered part of an incomes policy.

Officials said that a better indication of any new mood about "incomes policy" might be seen in about 10 days when the council issues the second of its "inflation alerts," promised by the president last summer.

Although the CEA has become increasingly concerned about wage and price pressures, officials said that the chief motivation for the oil price investigation stemmed instead from the special nature of the oil situation, notably potential oil shortages — especially in the northeast.

George A. Lincoln, director of the office of emergency preparedness and chairman of the administration's oil import policy committee announced the investigation, stressing that it was mandatory under a 1959 proclamation requiring him to maintain constant surveillance of imports "in respect to national security."

But the administration underscored the importance it gave to the investigation by having McCracken play a role; this is not mandatory under the act.

Lincoln said he would also seek the asistance of the justice and interior departments.

Informed sources said Friday that the industry would be invited, through a notice in the federal register, to make comments. If, following this procedure, the OEP should decide that recent price increases were not required by national security, then a number of measures might be taken to increase oil supplies.

Husky Oil

Husky Oil Ltd. reports nine-month earnings of $5.6 million or 55 cents a share before an extraordinary charge compared with $6 million or 59 cents a share in the period last year.

The extraordinary charge resulted from disposal of off-shore drilling assets, the company said.

Net earnings from operations totalled 41 cents a share compared with 33 cents in the same period of 1969.

Sales and operating revenues increased by 9 per cent to $135.5 million from $124.2 million.

Fleet

Consolidated net earnings of Fleet Manufacturing Ltd. of $104,793 for the first quarter ended Sept. 30 compared with $40,148 last year.

Total sales of $6.5 million were more than double $2.4 million due to real estate volume increasing to $5.58 million from $802,100. Manufacturing sales were $917,755 against $1.6 million.

Power Corp.

Power Corp. of Canada Ltd. had consolidated net earnings of $4.2 million or 40 cents a share in the nine months ended Sept. 30 compared with $4.4 million or 60 cents in the corresponding 1969 period.

Gross income for the first nine months of 1970 amounted to $10.74 million down from $11 million in the 1969 period.

Directors decided to omit the declaration of a quarterly dividend on the participating preferred and common shares for the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1970.

Weston

An eastern Canada supermarket war is not expected to affect the earnings of Loblaw Companies Ltd., unconsolidated subsidiary of George Weston Ltd.

Weston said Loblaws, with its diversity of markets in Canada and the U.S., is in a strong position to meet competition and therefore no change is foreseen in the payment of dividends to Westons.

Nine-month Weston earnings to Sept. 30 amounted to $11.37 million, down from $11.38 million or 98 cents a share both years including extraordinary items. Consolidated sales were $718 million, up from $657.8 million.

Int. Breweries

Interior Breweries Ltd. six-month results are ahead of 12-month results for 1969, which the company attributes to its new line of Mountain Brew malt liquor.

Sales for the period ended Sept. 30 were up $1 million to $2.6 million, compared with $2.8 million in the 12 months of last year. But net income in the same period was $192,700 or 26.7 cents a share, against $129,129 to Sept. 30 last year and $189,114 in the whole of 1969.

YOUR TAXES

Timing of Payments Important

By I. H. ASPER

When it comes to taxation issues, there are three main questions: who should pay the tax, how much must be paid, when should it be payable.

The latter question, the timing of taxation, doesn't generally attract much public discussion, but it is important nonetheless. For example if a tax payment can be deferred for an entire year, the taxpayer is substantially better off because he's had the use of his money an extra year. The reverse is true also.

For wage earners, the issue is fairly straightforward: tax is payable on the basis of all income he receives in cash during the year. However, where a taxable profit arises from a business transaction, the tax is payable if the amount of the profit is ascertained, even though the taxpayer might not have received his profit in cash in the year in question.

For example, on December 31, a taxpayer who is in the business of buying and selling land, sells a parcel at a profit but agrees to give the buyer until the following year to pay. Under those conditions the seller must pay tax on his profit even though it hasn't been paid to him. If he isn't careful in his dealings, he can get into quite a cash bind where he owes tax but hasn't the cash to pay. Revenue authorities are not noted for their generosity in extending credit.

SERIOUS PROBLEMS

In recent years, some rather serious problems for taxpayers have developed in cases where there is a forced sale of property through government expropriation. In those cases, if a profit is made, the courts have ruled that the taxpayer must pay his tax in the year in which he knows how much compensation he will receive, even though he may wait several years before he actually receives his money.

A few weeks ago, the Supreme Court of Canada handed down a judgment in a tax case which demonstrates both the problem and the need for new law on the subject.

The taxpayer bought a barcel of land in Halifax in 1954. In 1955 the province of Nova Scotia expropriated it and then began negotiating with the owner over the amount of compensation to be paid. The issue of compensation went to court where, in 1957, the judge settled the price. The price exceeded the cost of the land to the taxpayer, so there was a profit which the Supreme Court ruled was taxable.

But the issue only begins there. When the expropriation court settled the amount of compensation in 1957, it ordered the government to make a downpayment, which it did. However, the provincial government disputed the total award and appealed to the Nova Scotia Supreme Court.

By 1961, the valuation appeal was heard and the province paid the final purchase price. The tax question before the Supreme Court was this: for what year should the profit be taxed, 1955, when the land was expropriated, 1957, when the first court award and down payment was made, or 1961, when the final amount was settled and paid.

The answer to this question can make quite a difference to a taxpayer's affairs. He might have a loss in one year, arising from other operations, so there would be no net tax to pay, or alternatively, his tax rate might be different in one given year.

MUST BE PAID

The court has now ruled that the profit in this case must be paid as though it had been earned in the 1957 year, even though the amount was not finally known until the end of the court proceedings in 1961. That conclusion is not free from serious potentialities.

Mrs. Gwyneth McGregor in reviewing the case in the Canadian Tax Journal raises some interesting possibilities. If a taxpayer in these circumstances must pay tax as though he had received his profit in the year the first expropriation court makes its award, what happens if several years later, through an appeal, a higher court reduces the award and thereby cuts his profit? Under the law, the government can only re-assess tax returns for four years prior to the current year.

Thus if the award and the taxable profit were reduced after four years, the taxpayer will have overpaid his tax, perhaps very substantially, without any means of receiving a refund.

here are many other similar problems with the law as it now stands in these cases. What is required here is a legislative amendment to prevent inequity from occurring.

REAL ESTATE MARKET SLOW BUT STABLE

TORONTO (CP) — The real estate market was slow but generally stable during October, the Mortgage Insurance Co. of Canada says in its latest monthly survey.

Winnipeg was the only one of 33 metropolitan areas surveyed that had a strong real estate market.

"The supply of conventional funds for homeowners was fair to good in most areas, but 10 had a shortage."

Prime Rate Reduction Helps Bonds

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian bond market closed sharply higher in active trading this week.

The announcement of a reduction in its lending rate by the Bank of Canada sent prices sharply higher Wednesday.

The short-end of the market rose about 75 cents. Mid- and long-term issues gained about three-quarters of a point. The corporate sector gained more than one point.

Total bond financing for October was about $623 million, Wood Gundy Securities Ltd. said. Bond financing for the same month in 1969 totalled about $178 million.

Day-to-day money was available Friday at four per cent. Three- and six-month treasury bills closed at 4.89 and 4.96 per cent respectively.

'MYRA BRECKINRIDGE'

Myra Doesn't Go All the Way

A Film Review

By PETER McNELLY

The last Michael Sarne film to show in Victoria was a delicate, bittersweet story about a dying British nobleman.

Aside from its visual grace, nothing in that movie—Joanna—foretold the direction Sarne was to take in making Myra Breckinridge.

Myra Breckinridge is an attempt at monstrous insult to the eye and ear, a garish but fluid attack on Hollywood, and Hollywood's myths of glamor. Be prepared to be insulted.

No commercial film before Myra Breckinridge has ever assaulted the popular conception of glamor with as much guiltless abandon. Yet Sarne's destruction of Hollywood could easily have been more disgusting than it is.

Like so many recent films which harpoon our culture, Sarne's possesses several cloying devices that sweeten his shaft.

Myra Breckinridge is almost unfailingly pleasant to watch. Its version of Hollywood seductively posh. The sets are lavish and lavishly graced with lithe, rounded flesh. At times, the dialogue crackles with witty obscenities.

The acting is strong, spirited and erotic. Raquel Welch as Myra is the standout performer. I have never found her to be sexy until this movie.

She has always seemed, to me, too athletically clean. Superhuman. But this time, the superhuman bombast of the movie matcher has amazonic power.

As the aging sex goddess Leticia Van Allen, Mae West is not nearly as physically repellent as a siren in her mid-70s should be.

And she is, of course, Mae West above all, sashaying onto the screen with cheerful immorality past would-be Clark Gables and Cary Grants. Giving them the once-over she says, "I'll be right with you, boys. Get your resumes out."

Instantly, we are hurled back into the 1930s, and no amount of Sarne's contempt for Hollywood can reduce that pleasure.

Myra Breckinridge, in other words, goes all out to reduce Hollywood to an obscenity, a perversion.

But its many charms are pleasurable in themselves, thereby detracting from Sarne's myth-destroying bitterness.

Because it lunges bluntly at conventional sexual respectability (the film is the story of a homosexual who has himself transformed into a woman in order to destroy the American ideal of manhood), many people will find Myra Breckinridge heady stuff.

But it's not that shocking. Hollywood is an easy target at which to hurl obscenities in order to destroy obscenity.

In their own ways, novelists like Nathanael West, Budd Schulberg and painters like Robert Rauschenberg and Andy Warhol have attacked Hollywood with bitterness equal to Sarne's.

Novels like Naked Lunch, Why Are We in Vietnam and The Story of O have put obscenity to more sophisticated ends than Myra Breckinridge has done.

The commercial American film continues to catch up to the psychological and social intentions of other art forms. It is not accidental that Myra Breckinridge is able to show in Victoria while Andy Warhol's similarly obscene film Lonesome Cowboys will probably never come here.

Myra Breckinridge gets away with its perversity because it is not an esthetically honest vision of social obscenity.

Hollywood's lies about wealth, glamor, sexuality and success are far uglier than Myra Breckinridge paints them.

Movies like Lonesome Cowboys, Faces, Goin' Down the Road and even Five Easy Pieces undermine popular beliefs because they do not glamorize life.

Myra Breckinridge glamorizes Hollywood in order to destroy it. But its entertaining qualities—the humor, vivacity and sexiness—stick out against Sarne's anger and charm it to death.

This much-maligned movie has been damned for the wrong reasons. Rather than enduring as a stellar example of bad taste, it will seem quaint on the rerun circuit two years from now.

'Gentle Eagle' Heston Fights For Screen Actors' Rights

By GARY ARNOLD

There is indeed, such a thing as star presence, and although it has been known to take many forms, Charlton Heston embodies one of the non-ambiguous forms.

You don't ask yourself, what is the mysterious something-or-the other that makes this guy a movie star? You see what it is when Heston rises to shake your hand: this guy is an impressive, extraordinary physcial specimen.

Heston was in Washington recently to promote, somewhat belatedly, the new film version of "Julius Caesar," in which he plays the role of Antony. While it's true enough that he suggests the American eagle in human form, what first strikes you is the perch upon which that large, sharp-featured eagle profile rests.

Heston is tall, and he has shoulders that just don't quit. He was coatless, wearing a lavender dress short with a narrow black tie, and the breadth of the man was truly imposing: he seemed to have an eagle's wingspan too.

After you adjust to his dimensions, it's necessary to adjust to his eyes, which are steel-blue and very penetrating, and the deep, resonant voice. One could easily remain fixated in the physical presence, but Heston's personality doesn't seem at all imperious. The frame and profile and gaze notwithstanding, he finally impresses you as an earnest, benevolent, gentle sort of eagle.

CHARLTON HESTON

Heston, 46, was born in Evanston, Ill., and his first role as Antony was in a low-budget production of "Julius Caesar" organized by a group of friends out of Northwestern University.

"It's generally assumed that I was still it Northwestern when the film was made," said Heston, "But I actually came back home to do it. I'd been out of school for a couple of years, trying to make a living on Broadway."

The film has become something of a legend, partly because of Heston's later fame. It was directed by David Bradley, a highschool and college chum, and Heston describes it as "a brave, youthful attempt to do shakespeare on a budget of $11,000. His first film was also for Bradley — a silent 16mm version of "Peer Gynt," made when they were undergraduates.

I asked if his idea of the young Antony had changed since he played it more than 20 years ago. "Yes," he said. "The first time I thought of him as an utterly sincere and heroic figure. The classic pattern is to go the other way and interpret Antony as an opportunity, a demagogue. I hope I haven't turned him upside down. I wanted to get both tendencies — the sincere young friend of Caesar, honestly appalled by his assassination, and the political opportunist."

Heston's latest film project is a novel called "I Am Legend." He has owned the property, which he describes at "a horror story with socio-political overtones," for several years and will now appear in it for Warner Brothers.

Evidently, the story will cast him in a last Adam role somewhat reminiscent of the hero in "Planet of the Apes." The action is set after a war employing chemical and biological weapons has left only a handful of human beings alive.

In his capacity as president of the Screen Actor's Guild, Heston appears discourgaged by present conditions and vastly encouraged by the immediate future, especially the development of the video casette industry.

"I hope we'll be able to remember the last 12-month period as the nadir," Heston said. "We have 23,000 members in SAG, and 76 per cent of them averaged less than $3,000 last year. That's below the official poverty level. We haven't been adamant, and we've tried to co-operate in measures to reduce costs and encourage production.

"But now there isn't much production capital readily available. You hear that the film business is thriving in Spain and other places, but I doubt it. The lack of American capital limits film-making all over the world, since most of the production capital originates here."

Heston is adamant about getting a piece of the casette action for guild members. He said there may be jurisdictional differences of opinion between SAG and the other major unions — AFTRA and Actor's Equity—but that "one way or another, guild members are going to share in the profits of that industry."

Heston expanded on this point: "I think it will be the most important item on the agenda when we renegotiate the SAG contract next year. That isn't official policy yet; but it's the way I feel personally. I'd even be willing to countenance a reduction in the present wage scale if we can guarantee that guild members will benefit from the video casette developments.

"A lot of people in the industry are pessimistic about casettes, but I think they'll increase our opportunities. It's not only renting films on casettes. The educational potential is fabulous. They may change the nature of theatrical exhibition, and they'll certainly change the nature of network television as we've known it, but we should have a greater variety, a greater choice."

Brass Quartet To Perform

The Sunday series of faculty concerts being staged this winter by University of Victoria's School of Fine Arts will feature a new chamber ensemble this Sunday.

Members of the Victoria Brass Quartet, founded in September, are Boyd Hood and Dennis Lillie, trumpets, Richard Ely, horn, and Howard Woodland, trombone.

All but Hood are also principals in Victoria Symphony Orchestra.

In addition to the quartet, clarinetist Don De Roche — another symphony principal — and pianist Mary Ducker of the Conservatory of Music faculty, will perform the Brahms Clarinet Sonata in F minor.

Music to be played by the Brass Quartet will include works of contemporary composers Jerry Sieg and Ulysses Kay.

The program will conclude with a Septet for Wind Instruments by Paul Hindemith, conducted by George Corwin and honoring the composer's 75th birthday.

Starting time for the concert is 4 p.m. in the MacLaurin Building auditorium.

Some Wooing Needed to Get Children Back to Books

By JUDITH YEMEN

A four-year-old can delightedly dismantle a book page by page but he will rarely kick in the television screen.

Not surprisingly, a parent is more likely to spend $4.50 a month on a cable TV hookup than spend the same amount annually for one children's book.

Something is coming between children and books, as Winnipeg librarian Helen Robertson cried in a recent issue of Canadian Consumer, and concerned parents are wondering what to do.

A large part of the problem is television with its fast-paced fantasies waiting for the easy flick of the finger. The relative simplicity of settling down in front of the tube and letting entertainment roll over you has led one communications prophet to state that print as a medium is dying.

Somehow the authors of the 6,000 children's books that are published yearly in North America aren't listening. They still believe in the power of print.

But it isn't the simplicity or economics of television alone which draws the child and his parent away from reading. School homework, social clubs and sports combine to fill leisure hours.

So what do you do to change the picture?

Sports, TV and homework have an importance of their own. It's up to you to encourage the kids to add reading to their activities.

This year librarians are attempting to woo children and young people back to the "ancient, musty" libraries by emphasizing during Young Canada Book Week, beginning Sunday, that films, records and tapes are a part of the scene.

The sponsors, the Canadian Library Association, say that a library is a gathering place for information in almost any form. (They admit also that these non-book forms are more likely found in school libraries.)

To get back to the problem of encouraging childhood reading (and probably showing the way to the library where the records and tapes are), Mrs. Robertson suggests that parents become acquainted with the children's books of the past 30 years.

The Greater Victoria Public Library has a number of book guides for parents on the shelves in the children's section.

Mrs. Robertson also recommends, quite strongly, that a bedtime story period be added to the day. Not only will the youngster learn to like books, but he will retain a warm feeling about reading in general.

If Marshall McLuhan is right about children of the television era being bewildered by the print-dominated school system, the additional value of properly encouraged reading habits can be seen.

Besides, in these days of youth unrest, parents can't be sure that the radical four-year-olds of the future will refrain from kicking in TV sets right in the middle of Here's Lucy, with far more thought and purpose than today's tots display in their occasional book-tearing moments.

The Creation In Legend

Different cultures have varying versions of the creation of the world although there does seem to be a common thread in many of them.

This thread is a super-being who created the Earth and peopled it with Man and animals.

Three recent collections of North America native legends give us two versions of the Creation, unique to the people who relate them. All three books have been written for children.

One is a collection of legends of the Wabanaki Indians by Nova Scotian author Kay Hill.

MORE GLOOSCAP STORIES, by Kay Hill. Illustrations by John Hamberger. McClelland and Stewart. $4.95.

Miss Hill's current work is More Glooscap Stories, a follow to Glooscap and his Magic Legends, printed in 1963. The first book was adapted for television and has been seen across Canada. Those youngsters who enjoyed the first collection should find this one equally entrancing.

Glooscap, according to the Wabanakis, came from the sky with his twin brother, Malsum, to fill the empty Earth with living creatures. Jealous Malsum tried to destroy Glooscap's work but Glooscap, protecting his people, killed his brother.

RAVEN, CREATOR OF THE WORLD, by Ronald Melzack. Illustrations by Laszlo Gal. McClelland and Stewart. $4.95.

The legends of the Eskimos attribute the creation of the world to Raven, a super-being who could take the shape of a bird or a man. As a bird, Raven made the Earth from a snowball rolling off his wings. He made Man from clay inside the snowball.

The collection which deals exclusively with this legendary being is Raven, Creator of the World, by Ronald Melzack.

Melzack, a Montreal psychologist, has taken 10 Raven legends and melded them into a smooth-flowing storybook for children. The two-tone illustrations by Laszlo Gal are consistent with the text.

ELIK, and Other Stories of the Mackenzie Eskimos, by Herbert T. Schwarz. Illustrations by Mona Ohoveluk. McClelland and Stewart. $7.95.

However, there is a second book of Eskimo legends which is just as good and perhaps more exciting than Raven.

Elik, and Other Stories of the Mackenzie Eskimos was put together by Herbert Schwarz, a medical doctor who has practised in the far North.

It is the literary style of each legend which excites the imagination. You feel that the story-teller sits across from you in the flickering light of a whale blubber lamp, recalling the history of his people.

Before the Kabluna, or white man, came to the North, the Eskimos had no writing craft and all the history and legends were passed from generation to generation by word of mouth.

Elik gives the feeling that the Eskimos' oral tradition has not died. In addition to stories of the Raven, Schwarz includes other legendary figures, such as the Northern Lights People.

The illustrations were done by Mona Ohoveluk, who flavors the tales of her people with the simple artistry of the Eskimo.

The author also gives us biographies of the Eskimos from whom he heard the legends. The story-tellers and their lives in the North provide even more depth to the book. — J.Y.

'Origin of the White Whale,' from Elik

9-Year-Old's View of World

Precocious children sometimes startle their parents with ideas and words that reveal "wisdom beyond their years," but parents come to expect these things with a certain pride.

Pity the poor, unsuspecting visitor who must be shocked, then charmed by the display before accepting the performance for what it is: A facile grasp of the adult world by a youngster.

THE MAGIC MAILBOX, THE BORONIAN WAR, TROUBLE UNDERGROUND, by William Robson. New Press. $7.50.

William Robson, 11, invites us into his precocious grasp of the world via three novellettes that he wrote when he was nine years old.

The Magic Mailbox, The Boronian War, and Trouble Underground are imaginative fantasies of six children who escape from an orphanage to Earth 2, a world filled with strange beings and wracked by wars.

Witches brew child-brat stews; a friend is murdered by a deposed king; a man scientist plots disaster; a rhyming dragon "about the size of a large rat" warns them of doom.

What more could a child want from a book?

Adults will find the trilogy a vigorous experience in reading out loud and an interesting reflection of their world. They will also find the spellings cute. ("They were like collums of smoke that rose from a pile of white ashes." "Then you still denigh it?")

This could be the most serious flaw in the book, and certainly not the fault of young William (do they call him Billy or Willy?)

New Press publishers, in their wisdom, rendered the original manuscripts into print without so much as adding a comma. They say the books, approximately five inches square, are exact duplicates of those William wrote, illustrated and bound during a six-week vacation at the family cottage on Go Home Bay, Ont.

To whom is New Press trying to sell the trilogy — to parents who will buy the set or to children who will read it?

Children of my acquaintance delight in picking out errors. It seems a shame to distract them from enjoying the plots. — J.Y.

FOR PRE-SCHOOLERS

Help From Television

You have a four-year-old child who can't tell the difference between a circle and a square; or your five-year-old knows that a and b are letters but q stumps him.

You have several solutions:

1. Let him, or her, watch the television program, Sesame Street, on Channel 2 at 11 a.m. or Channel 9 at 5 p.m. Monday to Friday.

2. Help him discover shapes, letters and numbers through the Sesame Street books.

3. Allow your child to do a little of both. It's good for him and for you.

The Sesame Street set of books is a compilation of ideas from the children's television program of the same name.

SESAME STREET BOOKS, Little, Brown. $3.95 each.

Originators of the TV program, the Children's Television Workshop, wanted to help the culturally-deprived child before he was placed in the middle-class school system. The workshop's program, aired on U.S. National Educational Television and bought by the CBC this season, is enough of a success to appeal to all children, culturally-deprived or not.

The bright, action-filled hour is a storybook filled with a-b-c's and 1-2-3's presented in the psychedelic vernacular of today.

The resulting books use situations and scenes from the program which your child will easily recognize. Or, if he doesn't watch the program, will learn to like.

We all remember that boring Grade One workbook in which we had to pick the triangle from a row of circles. The S.S. Book of Shapes, for instance, tells what a triangle is and lets the youngster point out the shape in pictures of kites, Buckminster Fuller's geodesic dome, and the span of a super-bridge.

It's far more exciting and stimulates an interest in the things he takes for granted around him.

However, parents must be prepared to spend time helping their child discover the books. Each one of the set has two pages of hints for the adult on how to best use the material.

Other new books available for the pre-schooler this fall are story and picture books.

WIGGLE TO THE LAUNDROMAT, by Dennis Lee. Illustrations by Charles Pachter. New Press. $5.

Wiggle to the Laundromat, a large, sturdily-bound collection of poems, cries out to be read loudly and often. The illustrations, in black and white, match perfectly the absurd and zany rhyming text. The following poem is one example:

A Martian with a mangled spear
Is stuffing tarts in my left ear.
If I turn off my hearing aid
Will I still taste the marmalade?

THEODORE, the Mouse Who Wanted to Own a Frying Pan, by William Papas. Oxford University Press. $3.25.

The evils of greed are revealed in a book about Theodore, the mouse who wanted to own a frying pan. Wash drawings in the manner of a pale comic strip carry the light-hearted text.

JORINDA AND JORINDEL, by Bernadette Watts. Oxford University Press. $3.95.

Artist Bernadette Watts has chosen the Brothers Grimm fairy tale, Jorinda and Jorindel, as the next vehicle for her artistry.

The tale of a witch who changes pretty girls into caged nightingales and the boy who releases them from captivity follows Watts' first books on Little Red Riding Hood and Hans Millerman.

This new book is a tender picture story for the introspective child. — J.Y.

THE BUNNY FARM

By NORMAN CRIBBENS

WINDERMERE, England — Every year parents and grandparents bring another generation of children to the birthplace of Peter Rabbit, Mrs. Tiggy-Winkle, Tom Kitten, the Flopsy Bunnies, Mrs. Tittlemouse, Jemima Puddle-Duck and Pigling Bland.

For it was here, at Hill Top Farm near the Lakeland village of Sawrey, that Beatrix Potter created so many of her childhood whimsies.

The farm today is just as she left it and visitors familiar with her books can greet, as old friends, the black-leaded fireplace, the steel fender, the multi-colored rag rug and the old oak dresser; for she arranged the interior of the farmhouse to serve as illustrations for her stories.

The creator of Benjamin Bunny and Jemima Puddle-Duck is still remembered locally as a sturdy, tweedy old lady with clogs on her feet who tramped the village and neighboring lanes in all weathers and was an active campaigner for the preservation of England's famous Lake District.

She acquired Hill Top Farm in 1905 after the untimely death of her fiance, Norman Warne, whose firm published some of her first stories, and found consolation for her deep sorrow in the gentle, rolling country between Windermere and Coniston.

Other letters of this period confirm that Beatrix Potter had found a new wonder and a new joy at Hill Top Farm. Between 1905 and 1913 she wrote 13 stories and most of them had the farm as their setting.

Canadian History for All

By HUMPHRY DAVY

If all history was written as it is presented by Leslie F. Hannon in his Forts of Canada it would be a much wider read subject. This is a book to be enjoyed by both young people and adults.

The author notes in the prologue that Canadians have been careless of history and far too modest in presenting their past.

And he adds: "Those who believe that some sizable parts of the past, with, for instance, its French vs. British battles, should be buried in the name of biculturalism are inviting comparison with Canute — history will never simply go away.

"We are that past, and it is as real today as is Louisbourg, Nova Scotia, or Victoria, British Columbia. It contains, as those names suggest, episodes of equal valor and glamor under both flags, and it will strengthen and not divide us if we accept it proudly."

FORTS OF CANADA, by Leslie F. Hannon. McClelland and Stewart. $16.95.

Hannon shows that both sides can accept history proudly.

The forts of Canada are in fact the beginnings of Canada, and around them developed events which shaped the nation and provided the stimulus for economic growth and expansion.

The first part of the book deals with the establishment of French forts, the building of Louisbourg, the great fortress which many people believed would never fall; its seiges and eventually its capitulation.

Hannon tells the story of the Indian wars and the terror they spread through the 13 American colonies; the battle and seiges for the capture of Quebec, and the establishment of Hudson's Bay forts on the Prairies and in British Columbia.

There is a lively account of the war of 1812 when American forces invaded Canada and were repelled by a small force of Canadian volunteers and British troops.

Western Canadians are not too familiar with the 1812 war, but this period is one of the most stirring in the nation's history. It was a bitter conflict and perhaps did more towards establishing Canada as a country than any other factor.

One of the most interesting parts of the book is the author's portraits of General Wolfe and the Marquis of Montcalm. These are two fascinating men who fought one of the world's important battles — a battle which changed the course of history.

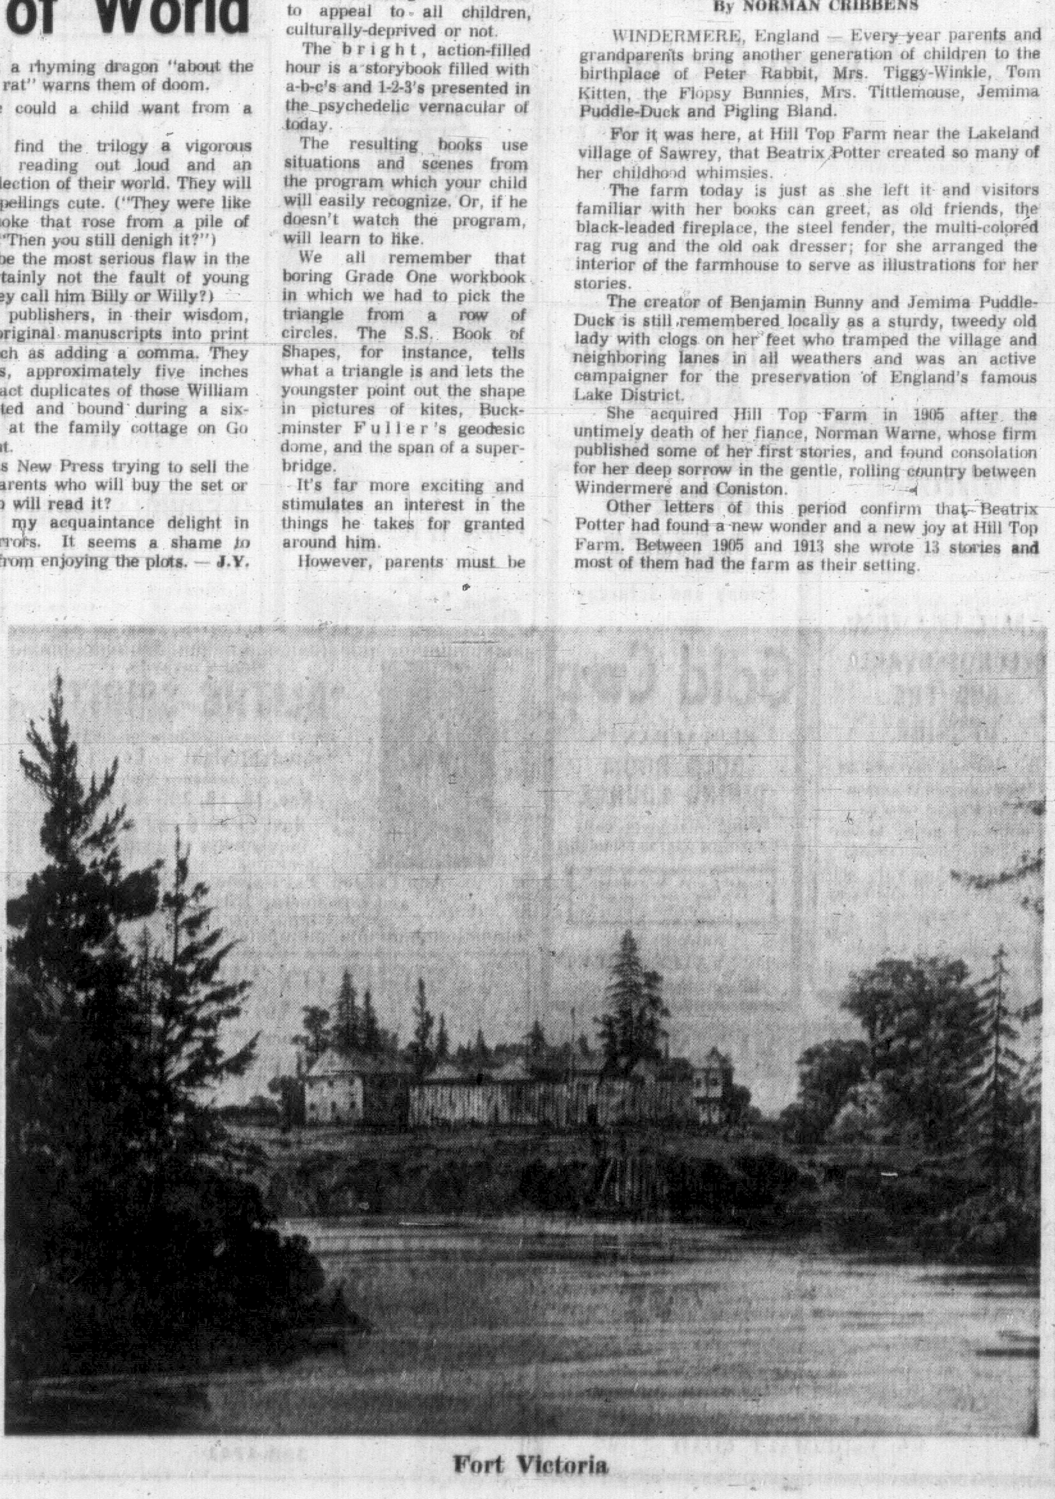
Both men realized what was at stake. The armies were small but the consequences and effects which followed the battle were greater than those of Austerlitz which involved two large armies.

In effect if Wolfe had lost the battle it is doubtful there would be a United States republic today. George Washington, who loved war, would not have fought his fellow countrymen over tea, but for the survival of the American colonies.

Hannon concludes with an epilogue on the forts of Canada today. Many of them, he points out, are gone forever. But luckily, since the beginnings of the Canadian national parks system in 1885, two dozen forts or fortifications have been designated as National Historic sites and have been restored and opened free to the public. The provinces, too, have programs for restoring old forts.

If after reading this book you become a fort fan, the book contains a checklist of the forts to be seen in Canada.

It also has 259 fascinating illustrations in color and black and white, plus, historical maps and rare engravings.



Fort Victoria

Good Theatre Favors Writer

Sounding Board

. . . By Audrey Johnson

The two vital ingredients for sustained and healthy productivity in the arts are money and frequent infusions of fresh blood from new, vigorous talent.

It is no good pursuing the first if you are not prepared to keep alert and open your arms wide for the second. No amount of dollars can prevent the stale, the repetitive, the uninspired and mediocre from dying on the vine.

You might as well pump good red blood into a corpse.

Which explains why I feel that Britain is likely to sustain its pre-eminent place in English-speaking theatre for a considerable period.

In Britain the climate has never been more favorable for the brewing and ripening of provoking new concepts in theatre.

Right Progression

What has grown up there in the last quarter-century is a playwright's theatre, basically, and this it seems to me, is exactly the right progression.

From good theatre through great playwright to great theatre.

There are probably, at the very least, a round dozen British dramatists writing excellent plays — Peter Nichols, Christopher Hampton, David Storey, Peter Luke, Barry England, Tom, Stoppard are some of them.

Organizations such as the Oxford Theatre Group and the English Stage Society are their hosts and in their turn the writers provide the directors, designers and actors with the essential challenge, the fertile new material that nourishes and inspires.

The English Stage Society's home is the Royal Court Theatre from which has emerged over the last 15 years and more many of the really worthwhile and solid West End successes.

Human Dilemma

Five Royal Court plays were recently to be seen in major London theatres, four of them destined for New York. One is Storey's Home. Another is The Philanthropist, an intriguing comedy that says so much about the human dilemma of inaction versus action.

Twenty-four year old Christopher Hampton's play is set in a university town sometime in the future.

Its central character is a professor, a confirmed believer in impartiality, the middle road, the continual avoidance of positive action which culminates in total negativism.

Around him violence flares, a student blows his brains out in the professor's flat, there is a mass assassination of the Liberal cabinet, a plot to eliminate violently Britain's top 10 writers.

His extreme moderation alienates his fiancee, earns him the contempt of his acquaintances and in the end leaves him to passive acceptance of the situation among his books and comforted by the cigarettes he had given up.

A superb cast was brilliantly headed by Alec McCowen (the original Hadrian VII) who achieved the anomaly of making the uncommitted extravagantly neutral Philip an unforgettable character.

The Philanthropist was the most recent transfer from the Royal Court when I saw it in London at the delightful intimate May Fair Theatre.

Of all the arts, Canada has lagged farthest behind in the production of playwrights. Like the chicken and the egg, something has to come first but nobody seems to be quite certain of "who" or "how."

Perhaps it is neither playwright nor players, but public.

Little Demand

All over Canada, the story is totally different from what it is almost anywhere else in the world. Public interest, public demand for the live stage here has been miniscule.

It is growing, but Canadians generally are still satisfied with mechanical and too often mediocre entertainment.

Here and there across the country a theatre movement burgeons — in Charlottetown, in Winnipeg — but there is still no brilliant and established English-speaking company, not even at Stratford, that is deeply interested and concerned with the discovery of new playwrights.

Guest Conductor

For the fifth concert in the current subscription season, Victoria Symphony Orchestra will have a guest conductor on the podium, Lawrence Leonard, who is resident conductor of the Edmonton Symphony.

London-born, Leonard has been familiar with major orchestras since the age of 16, when he first appeared as a promising young cellist with the London Symphony Orchestra at one of Sir Henry Wood's promenade concerts.

Since beginning his career as a conductor, Leonard has conducted major orchestras in Britain and also in Berlin, Vienna, Paris, Hamburg, Cape Town and Holland.

Major work he will conduct in Victoria, Nov. 22 and 23, is the Brahms C minor Symphony No. 1.

LORRAINE TRAVIS

SHE KNOWS THE SCORES

Virtually every musical show that has ever been staged anywhere owes a tremendous debt in the first instance to its rehearsal pianist.

It is this indefatigable artist who really knows the score — knows it better and more completely than the chorus master, better than any member of the cast and fully as well as the musical director.

Before he — or she — gives over his role to the orchestra, the competent rehearsal pianist has familiarized the cast to the fullest extent possible, with the style and effect of the ultimate accompaniment.

For he usually has knowledge, not only of his piano part, but of the instrumentation of the complete score, so that he can interpret the piano version somewhat in the dynamic and textural terms of the orchestra.

Victoria Operatic Society, now in the midst of rehearsals for this month's production of the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical, South Pacific, is fortunate in its accompanist.

Lorraine Travis belongs with the best.

For Mrs. Travis this is the 20th show in which she has worked for the VOS, since assuming the role in 1958 after attending University of British Columbia and spending a year in Europe.

The former Lorraine Brand had an early yen for the violin, but began with the piano in Winnipeg and never thereafter, altered course.

After moving back to Victoria — her native town — Lorraine became a student of Una Calvert, formerly one of this city's most highly regarded teachers.

Throughout her school and college years she was known as a brilliant young soloist and in constant demand as accompanist.

High technical competence, an exceptional rhythmic capacity, a sense of musical style, agility in sight-reading and sympathy with the singer — all these attributes are desirable in the rehearsal accompanist and all are demonstrated by Mrs. Travis.

She is a fortress of strength to all stage directors and so much of a backbone for the casts that when the orchestra takes over for the last couple of rehearsals, the cast feels, for a period, bereft.

And that is not to denigrate the orchestra which is groping its way at the first rehearsal, inevitably creating a sag after the previous weeks of ensemble work between director, cast and accompanist.

Native Victorian Walter Burgess, a one-time student of Wynne Shaw who has shaped a successful career in Eastern Canada, staging and choreographing shows, is the visiting director of South Pacific.

The 25th anniversary production of the VOS with Garth Gislason and Janet Senior in the leads, will be staged at McPherson Playhouse, Nov. 24-28.

'Seeing' Through Drawings

. . . With Gordon Rice

The latest show at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria seems to be primarily a fill-in exhibit, a way of stalling for time while the new wing gets completed. However, it's a display with quality, even if it's not particularly dramatic.

The display of Canadian drawings is something that would be of value to any student.

The very sparse brush-drawing by David Milne is probably the highlight of the collection. You can see his most careful and determined efforts to simplify a winter landscape with a completely personal method. One cannot say really whether this scene of barns and trees conveys more of the artist's personality than the actualities of winter, or vice versa.

We're reminded that, in fact, "weather" has little meaning at all besides the unique way it impresses human beings (and animals?). That is, the snow is just "there," until the individual human reaction occurs. Milne reminds you that each person may in fact see things quite differently.

Three pencil drawings by E. J. Hughes are most worthy of notice. His subjects are so commonplace, so "ordinary" ("Street Scene in Courtenay," "Coal Dump, Ladysmith," "Nanaimo Harbor"), that some viewers might easily overlook them.

Hughes however accomplishes a great deal with just a single pencil and a piece of paper. He'll take a dense, complicated subject and show exactly what interests him about it.

Out of a maze of cars, boats, poles, signs, roads, hills and sky he'll draw a very bold and clear picture in which every element is securely located in its place.

In doing this he never conveys the sense of a mechanical kind of "copying." It is as if everything he draws was sculpturally shaped in his mind, made simple and clear, and then fitted into its proper relationship with the other elements of his composition. His cars really feel like cars and they really rest on bumpy, dirt roads in just the manner one would expect them to.

His pencil line is so strong and definite and broad that his drawings look at first like lithographs. He always avoids fancy, artful, "striking" compositions, preferring to show (in a way we might almost call "objective") the interest and the beauty of the most commonplace scenes.

Very few artists can do this. Usually they find their inspirations in unusual situations and unusual moods. Hughes, I suspect, needs not to endure the boredom of waiting for the unusual.

Drawing students often tell me that this is one of the most important things that happens to them when they begin to study drawing; that they start to "see" things all around them . . . colors, combinations of form, and so on.

Faces of course are ordinary occurences in our visual day. If you compare the two pencil portraits of "Mortimer Lamb, Esq." by B. C. Binning and Fred Amess you can see what different approaches can be taken toward the same subject (both approaches being "realist" by the way, and not too stylistically separate). Both capture different peculiarities of a subject, the first by concentrating on outlines, the second by concentrating on shadows centering in the facial features.

Some work by important (historically) Canadian artists are here; Clarence Gagnon, Lemoine Fitzgerald. Their small drawings are deft, perceptive, and communicate perfectly the joys searching out forms and gestures in countryside scenes.

The other show is "Contemporary Japanese Prints," a bigger show, but perhaps harder to describe. As in post-war Italy there was in Japan an immense revival of energy and enthusiasm in the arts; in cinema, photography, painting, and in traditional arts such as the woodcut.

These woodcuts, too, are not like the traditional ones, Saito (one of the world's most popular woodcut artists) and Muntakata (another one) do express feelings and moods which are certainly Japanese, but in a striking new way,

'The One Thing I Know Is I Can Sing'

By BLAIK KIRBY

TORONTO — "I have contracts coming out of my nose," said Anne Murray, wrinkling it, "and that's my only worry. If I could just sing, and not have to worry about the little niggling things like all those contracts. The one thing I know about my career is that I can sing, and nobody can tell me different."

Nobody is trying to, for Anne is the golden girl of Canadian entertainment. In less than six months she has bounced from being merely a featured performer on Singalong Jubilee, to an "exclusive" CBC radio and TV contract, to a million-selling record, to appearances on a major U.S. TV show, and soon to an engagement in the luxurious Imperial Room, Canada's top night spot.

Her voice is the one thing she feels confident about, but she also has other and rarer assets. She is a happy, attractive girl-next-door whose naturalness is absolutely genuine, without even a tinge of theatrical artifice. Her voice may open ears, and doors, but it's her personality that's going to make her a star.

"What is a star?" she asks, and answers: "People are people, and that's where it's at. I don't feel any different now than I did when I was teaching school; in fact I feel less like a star now, 'cause when I was teaching I could sing, and the kids thought that was great."

In most of the country, her stardom is just starting, but she already knows what it's like. At home in the Maritimes she has been the biggest star around, for two whole years.

"I played everywhere there," she recalls. "People wanted me to sing, so I just did. They were all in a hurry to get me out, telling me I should go somewhere else to make a big name. But that was my training ground, that's where I learned everything I know."

From many people this would be vanity — but not from Anne. Her feet are firmly on the ground, and her assessment of herself is cool and thoughtful. She is merely recognizing facts.

Unlike many TV performers who are confections iced for the screen, she is even more attractive off than on. Her naturalness, which became apparent last week in her first CBC-TV special, is not refreshing but downright delightful. Her 25-year-old joie de vivre is infectious.

She arrived for our interview wearing little or no makeup, plus brown slacks and a fake-fur coat she'd had since Grade 10. After perfunctory reservations about submitting to our photographer, who was unexpected, she laughed, said "what the heck," and told him to shoot. Not one word or motion in the hour we spent together was theatrical or artificial, or even careful. She was just Anne.

SINGING STAR Anne Murray received gold record from Glen Campbell this week after "Snowbird" sold over one million copies.

"I love to sing," she said, "and I'd feel badly if people didn't like what I did. But I wouldn't care that much if I wasn't doing it. Singing is not my life. I sing because I like to sing, not because of some inner drive that some singers say they feel.

"The first time I got excited about it was when Snowbird (her big hit of last June) got to number 45 on the Billboard chart, with a bullet (to indicate that it was climbing rapidly). You hear so much about Top-40 music, and 45 was so close to Top-40 that I really got excited.

'I must say that I've been spoiled by everybody. I've been spoiled by Maritimes audiences, by all the critics, by the CBC. It's never changed. I guess maybe I'm just the kind of person that people spoil."

Obviously she feels more relaxed in front of an audience than in front of a camera. She knows she can keep an audience happy. But she concentrates strictly on entertaining them; she's dead set against using her power to influence them politically. It was one of the few strong points she expressed in our hour.

Until now she has lived, and as much as possible worked, in Halifax. But she fears that by the beginning of 1971 she will have to move to Toronto, where more and more of the action is.

"I work harder when I'm in Toronto," she says. "When I'm in Halifax I fall into that slow-moving groove that Maritimers are in. But I love it. It's home."

The Toronto move may be motivated by changes in her CBC schedule. She worries about her almost-constant exposure as a guest artist on the Tommy Hunter and Singalong shows.

As it is, she's Canada's most in-demand performer. She got another offer as we talked, to do radio commentary on the Grey Cup parade. Her face lit up; she'd have loved to do it — but she is already acting as grand marshal of the parade. "Howdaya like that!"

It's a job she welcomes because for one thing, it gets her into the game — and this former gym teacher loves football. There's one job she'd like to have there, however, that hasn't been offered — yet. She wants to call the play-by-play action.

On Stage Next Week

Buffalo Bill, Billy the Kid, Jesse James and all the Grand Guignol characters that inhabit Wild West shows have taken over the stage area of University of Victoria's Phoenix Theatre this week. The show is Indians by avant garde playwright Arthur Kopit. An all student cast will perform the play tonight, Sunday, and throughout next week until Nov. 21. Starting time — 8 p.m.

Tonight's is the final performance by St. Luke's Players of the Agatha Christie thriller, The Mousetrap. It can be seen at St. Luke's Hall, Cedar Hill Road, curtain time, 8:15.

Sunday afternoon the first public concert by the new Victoria Brass Quartet will take place at 4 p.m. in the MacLaurin Building auditorium on University of Victoria campus. The group will play a program of contemporary music.

Noel Coward's mischievous play about mediums and spiritualism, Blithe Spirit, will be presented by Bastion Theatre, Tuesday through Saturday, at McPherson Playhouse. Student performances Tuesday at 8 p.m. Two performances Saturday, at 6 and 9 p.m.

Friday noon concert at UVic MacLaurin Building will feature University of Victoria Orchestra. Program starts at 12:30 p.m. Open to public.

Music for lute and guitar will be played by Michael Strutt in a recital at Newcombe Auditorium, Friday, at 8 p.m.

At the Galleries

Canadian drawings are on view at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria. The exhibition surveys aspects of Canadian draftsmanship from the period of the Group of Seven, down to the present day. It begins with Varley and includes studies by Town, Bobak, Urquhart, Shadbolt, Harvey, Pavelic, Irwin, Ciccimarra and others.

Showing concurrently is an exhibition of works by five Japanese printmakers drawn from the Fred and Isabel Pollard collection. Both showings continue through Nov. 25.

Canadian Films Goin' Down Middle of Road

By BETTY LEE

TORONTO — A year ago he was broke. A 31-year-old filmmaker with a movie he wanted to finish and debt on his back so hefty, he was thinking of going into bankruptcy.

"But who the hell would have sued me?" shrugs Don Shebib. "How could they have got any money? I simply stopped thinking about finances when I was making Goin' Down the Road. It was just me and the picture. I never really knew whether or not it would be shown anywhere. I certainly never figured it would run for too long, even if it did get a booking. And reviews? I never thought there would be reviews. Not anywhere."

He flops lazily into a chair. Bearded, restless, a little bored. Dressed in crummy jeans. A nondescript T-shirt. An ancient windbreaker with the insignia of the East York Lions Football Club over his heart.

"Horning in on the interview!" he grins, suddenly alive as actor Paul Bradley pokes his head around the door. "Bloody ham! Get outa here and don't come back."

But it has been four weeks now since Goin' Down the Road won the Best Feature Film Etrog in the Canadian Film Awards and even Don has to admit that life is somewhat different. He starts to put his feet on the desk, then decides to be a gentleman and leave them on the ground. He fidgets and clears his throat.

"I'm becoming gradually aware," he says carefully, "that I've made the first step. I mean, the first step toward becoming a recognized director."

The same old cussin' shufflin' Don Shebib. Right after Awards Night, there was that trip to Tunis, courtesy of the Canadian Government. Ottawa planned to send six French-Canadian film-makers to the Arab-African Film Festival there but when Shebib hit the headlines with his Etrog award, Ottawa shoved him on the plane complete with a Road print to show to the Tunisians.

"Oh sure, everyone applauded when it was over," he says, tapping restlessly at a chair arm. "Actually, I didn't get to speak to many people in Tunis. Everything was in French, you know. I don't speak French. After that, I flew to New York for the opening of the film."

And? "Oh, interviews. Lillian Ross wants to do a piece about me for the New Yorker. I damn well don't know why. I hear I've got an upcoming date on the Dick Cavett show. Then there were people. People from Universal Pictures, agents, people like that. Producers with scripts. There was a script right on my hotel bed when I got into New York. Guy wanted me to do the thing in Spain. Absolute crap. I turned him down."

Shebib hoists his feet toward the desk again, then sighs and tucks them under his chair. Oh sure, he'd like to make some pictures in the States.

But that wouldn't be for at least another year. Right now, he has signed a contract with Bennett Fode of Toronto's Phoenix Films (who invested $30,000 in Road) to direct another feature. Shooting on the film — an as-yet-untitled story about four North York high school kids — will begin in January.

The budget for the new one will be far fatter than the bag-of-peanuts $85,000 spent on Goin' Down the Road. Matter of fact, the film will cost between $300,000 and $400,000.

So who says you can't make an extravaganza and keep it simple? Fifty per cent of the financing will come from the now highly-impressed Canadian Film Development Corp., which gave Shebib a $19,000 grant for Road, plus another $28,000 after it was safely released. The other half will come from Phoenix.

The same old Don Shebib. He swears he has made no real money out of Goin' Down the Road because the movie is still earning back its investment. He still gets a kick out of driving his unpaid-for Morgan automobile, collecting bagpipe records and playing golf.

He is still privately astonished at the deep interest local and foreign writers are showing in his background (sociology at the University of Toronto, some National Film Board and television documentaries) and amazed that interviewers want him to say "the same old thing, over and over again."

He still makes enemies around the Canadian film establishment because he insists that too many bad filmmakers are getting into the industry. Better he feels, that producers — and, presumably the CFDC—give available investment cash to a few good directors rather than spread it around among "hundreds of young independents, students and underground filmmakers."

Says Shebib, chewing his cough-drop: "Bad filmmakers with long hair are no better or worse than bad filmmakers with short hair. Who they are or where they come from is irrelevant. I'd rather see $20-million go to a great director like Orson Welles than to a bunch of kids who would turn out pretentious, masturbationist crap."

He shrugs when asked how he feels about the future for the film industry in Canada. "It doesn't seem to know where it's going. If you want to put it politically, some people are going to the right, some are going to the left. We seem to be stuck in the middle of the road. Quite frankly, I don't know whether the industry here is going to be that schizophrenic all of the time or whether there is going to be an honest, meaningful shift in one direction.

"I know a whole lot of people here are pushing hard to make Hollywood Establishment films. The trouble is, of course, that they won't be nearly as good as Holywood Establishment films. So why the hell bother?"

'Head' JP Gets the Boot

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — The Kansas attorney-general has pulled the office right out from under bearded, long-haired hippie Phillip Hill.

Hill was elected on the Democratic ticket without opposition Nov. 3 as one of two justices of the peace in Lawrence, a community of 45,000 and the home of the University of Kansas.

But Thursday, Attorney-General Kent Frizzel said the 1968 legislature abolished the office in 108 cities, including Lawrence.

"That's going to be challenged," Hill said of the ruling.

The ruling was requested by State Secretary Elwill Shanahan after county clerks in Geary and Douglas counties asked whether they should certify the election of justices of the peace.

Frizzell's opinion said: "There being no office to fill, in my opinion, purported elections for such offices were a nullity. Local election officers should therefore decline to certify the results of any such purported elections, and where such certification may have been made it should be disregarded."

Hill, 22, a self-proclaimed dealer in drugs, received more than 6,000 votes in the election.

After the election he said he would use the office to perform marriages for his hippie friends, including homosexuals, and hear damage claims of less than $1 in cases involving civil rights and pollution.

Canada Music Week Observed

Two concerts featuring Canadian music and musicians will be jointly sponsored by Victoria Conservatory of Music and the Registered Music Teachers Association to mark Canada Music Week, Nov. 27 and 28.

They will be presented in the Newcombe Auditorium of the Provincial Museum.

Students from both organizations will take part as well as members of the Conservatory faculty.

'Remembrance Day No Holiday'

Victoria war veterans don't like the U.S. plan to switch Remembrance Day observances from Nov. 11 to the last Monday in October to gain another three-day holiday weekend.

They'd rather have no holiday than change the date which marked the signing of the Armistice in the First World War, Jim Mayzes, Pacific Command executive officer for the Royal Canadian Legion, said the legion's national policy is opposed to any such change.

"We don't look upon Remembrance Day as a holiday.

"If there were to be a change it would be better to go back to where we were before there was a holitday and people made a clean-cut stop and remembered the debt they owe for two minutes."

His sentiments were echoed by Tom Harris, zone commander for southern Vancouver Island.

"If such a move was broached in Canada it would meet a lot of opposition. Remembrance Day should not be thought of as a holiday—it's much more important than that."

George Aitchison, past president of the 800 Pacific Wing, Royal Canadian Air Force Association, agreed.

"Remembrance Day, when the armistice was signed, is the proper day on which we should pay homage."

None of the veterans questioned favored a change.

Said one:

"There's more to life than trying to grab another long weekend. The chaps who dies weren't that concerned about themselves.

"That's what's wrong with the way we live today. We don't care enough about anyone else."

He asked not to be identified.

"My name's not important. What counts is that we don't forget what Nov. 11 is all about."

TROTTERS TANGLE

In welter of hooves, dust and sulkies, trotter named Opal Brigade goes down rounding turn in race at Sydney, Australia. Horse appears to have foot caught in wheel of sulky (partly obscured at right), from which driver is about to fall. Another horse and sulky also crashed into fallen horse. BILL WALKER

The Victoria Centennials are off to Colombia today, and everybody is wishing them the best, naturally. Even Art Worth. And it's too bad that old gravel-voice isn't going along. He'd keep them loose.

And it was a nice gesture on the part of one of the players to drop by and add a little "class" to the situation.

He just wanted to speak on behalf of some of the oldtimers and say what a great guy Art Worth had been, and still is. And that how much his time and efforts had been appreciated, especially by those who had been fortunate enough to be chosen from here to represent Canada in the world baseball championship.

Art Worth is a former senior leaguer, turned professional, and turned senior leaguer again, over the past 20 years or so. Maybe longer. He pitched a little, played first base, hit a few home runs, managed, coached and was the father confessor of aspiring youngsters from the minor league ranks. Particularly if they wanted to learn more about the game.

He even attempted a coaching school here once. It didn't pan out, because only experts are welcome in that field and all so-called experts come from out of town. But if he had been from out of town, it would have worked. He would have made it.

"We can't help it," said the player. "That's all we talk about—how Art used to handle us, how he would explain situations, as they arose on the field, and how he would get on you if you made a mistake.

"Oh sure, you'd be annoyed at times, but indirectly we always knew it was beneficial—to everyone. Because, if you wanted to, Art would take of his own time, and give you special training.

"He was a pro, and even though we were just city senior leaguers, he made us think like professionals, because that's the way he thought, and managed. Perhaps that's why Victoria did so well in this year's Canadian tournament. Some of us like to think so. Certainly Victoria baseball is on a high plane, and Art Worth deserves much of the credit for it.

"He gave us the early leadership we needed so badly after we got out of the kid leagues because as good-hearted as people are, you don't really learn that much baseball in the teen-age leagues.

"There was another thing, too. He'd jump you for a bad play, but make a good play and you wouldn't hear about it. He would preach on your mistakes, and it is amazing now, how right he was then.

"And it got so that if you got through a game without being balled out, or called down, then, and only then, did you figure you had played a reasonably perfect game."

Art didn't get to make the trip with the Centennials. It was just one of those things. Keith Todd is the coach and Bob Lumley the manager. They have done the job well up until this time and are well qualified for the test ahead.

"It is just that we felt that now Victoria has reached its peak in baseball, some credit should be given to where we think it is deserved," said the player. "And Art Worth is that man. If it hadn't been for him through the years, I doubt if Victoria baseball would have persevered as well as it has and, more to the point, I feel that it was Worth who gave some of us the background of experience and inside-baseball knowledge that has put us where we are today. And we'd like to thank him, publicly."

So, there it is, Art. Perhaps the boys will win one or two for you in Colombia. Because we all feel, too, that you deserve it, even if you never do stop talking. Baseball, that is!

MAPLETTES GET CHANCE TO BUILD SOLID LEAD

Away to an impressive start, Victoria Maplettes will have a golden chance to build a solid lead in the Inter-City Senior Women's Basketball League race when they tackle Vancouver Molsons tonight (8 p.m.) and Sunday (1 p.m.) at Oak Bay Senior High School.

Maplettes are currently tied for first place with University of B.C. Thunderettes, last season's Canadian champions who were rated the team to beat when the current campaign started.

However, Thunderettes have played four games while Maplettes have gone to the post only twice. And in their two starts, the Victorians collected a pair of one-point victories over the hard-checking UBC co-eds.

Hornets Again Reign As City Soccer Kings

Baker Scores Both Goals As Views Trip Tyees 2-1

It's Mount View, again!

The Hornets stand up as the Inter-High Senior Boys' Soccer League champions for a fourth straight year after edging Victoria Tyees 2-1 in a tension-packed final Friday at Royal Athletic Park.

And the heroes of the piece were goaltender Loris Corletto and Norm Baker, who scored both Mount View goals as the Hornets had to come from behind to stop the tough Tyees for a second straight year.

Hornets edged Victoria 5-4 in last year's final.

The victory marks the 12th straight unbeaten game for Mount View, which suffered its only loss 3-2 in its first start of the season.

ISLAND PLAYOFF

Now the Views look further afield. The Joe Bekkers-coached Hornets will face Cowichan in the Vancouver Island final at Royal Athletic Park next Friday, then plays host to the B.C. school championships Nov. 26-28.

Tyees, who lost goalkeeper Rick Turner through a leg injury after only eight minutes, took the lead when talented Bob Duncan broke away to score on Corletto in the 35th minute.

Then Corletto and Baker came along.

Baker tied it up three minutes after Duncan's goal. In the clear after taking a pass from Marvin Diercks, Baker gave Victoria substitute netminder Hans de Groede no chance.

CORLETTO SHARP

Baker completed scoring in the 71st minute after a fine play that also included captain Bob Bolitho and Dex Diercks.

Corletto had most of the answers after Duncan's goal. The Hornet netminder also reaped rich benefit from alert clearing by Mount View backs.

Bekkers was high in his praise of Corletto.

"That was the best game he played for us this season," said Bekkers. "They took the play away from us in midfield in the first half.

"And you better believe I was worried."

If a clue was needed to determine the outcome, it came in a preliminary girls' exhibition game.

In that one, Mount View edged Victoria, also 2-1.

DANCER SPECTACULAR AS RACING MEET OPENS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Famed driver Stanley Dancer of New Egypt, N.J., making a guest appearance, turned in a sensational performance with five wins in as many starts as the inaugural winter harness racing meet opened Friday at Exhibition Park before 7100 fans.

The winner of pacing's triple crown this year with the colt Most Happy Fella, Dancer scored with the pacer Jove in the third race, Darrell Counsel in the fourth, Robin Win in the sixth, Smoky Affair in the eighth and Fargo Richard in the featured ninth race.

B.C. Jockey Club officials said they were pleased with the first night of the 47-day racing season. The mutual handle was $118,724 for 10 races.

The meet continues through next March 6 with racing three days a week, with the possibility of it being stepped up to four days.

Larks Draw Slight Nod In Well-Matched Final

MONTREAL (CP) — The outcome of the Eastern Football Conference final between the closely-matched Hamilton Tiger-Cats and Montreal Alouettes, could depend on any one of four men—two on each team.

While neither Hamilton coach Joe Restic nor his Alouette counterpart, Sam Etcheverry, likely relishes the thought, the series could hinge on the place-kicking ability of Tommy Joe Coffey of the Ticats, or Montreal's George Springate.

Or to take it to the extreme, it could boil down to a kicking duel between quarterback-punters Joe Zuger of Hamilton and Montreal's Sonny Wade.

The first game of the total-point series is scheduled here Sunday at 11 a.m. PST, and will be televised nationally by the CTV network with the Montreal area blacked out. The second half of the series is slated for Hamilton, Saturday, Nov. 21, with the winner advancing to the Grey Cup at Toronto one week later against the Western Football Conference champions.

BOOKIES LIKE ALS

Montreal oddsmakers Friday established the Alouettes favorites by a single point for Sunday's opener.

The two teams split their three season games with each club winning at home and then battling to an 18-18 tie in the final game of the season here.

The Larks outscored the Ticats 68-58 on the season.

Over the 14-game EFC schedule, both clubs gave up the same number of points, 279, but the Ticats scored 292 points to 246 for the Als.

Hamilton is made up almost exclusively of veterans, while the Als have 23 new faces in their 32-man roster. Seventeen members of the Ticats have been on Grey Cup champion teams, while the Als are in their first EFC final since 1962.

Coffey, who set an all-time Canadian Football League scoring record last season with 148 points, won the scoring title this season. It marked the fourth consecutive year he has surpassed 100.

He counted 30 of his 113 points this season on five touchdowns in his dual capacity as a split end. In his kicking role he contributed 29 converts, 15 field goals anl nine singles when he was wide on tries for three-pointers.

Springate, meanwhile, joined the Als mid-way through the season. He contributed 41 points on 15 converts, eight field goals and two singles scored on wide field-goal attempts.

Cougars After Eight Straight

Coach Ron Matthews cracked the whip on his sagging Vancouver Centennials Friday and today they are within one point of the lead in the Coastal Division of the British Columbia Junior Hockey League.

Matthews, upset by his team's last two losing performances, threatened to make wholesale changes unless things started happening and Friday night, the Centennials replied with a 4-2 victory over Kamloops Rockets.

In other games, Vic Mercredi took over as the league's leading scorer as he collected four points to lead Penticton Broncos to a 6-3 win over New Westminster Royals.

BUCKS BOW AGAIN

Vernon opened up a five-point lead over last-place Kelowna in the Interior Division with a 6-3 romp past the Buckaroos in Kelowna.

In Vancouver, rookie centre Gord Stewart, Mike McCarthy, defenceman Bill Gaston and Alex Dick scored for the Centennials, who now trail Victoria Cougars by one point.

Gary Howatt and Tim Peck replied for Kamloops. Vancouver outshot the Buckaroos 37-30 before 1,075 fans.

Cougars get a chance to restore their three-point cushion tonight when they face the Rockets at Memorial Arena, starting at 8:30 p.m.

ROBINSON TO REST

Cougars still will be without forward Greg Robinson. Plagued by a back ailment for the past several days, Robinson has been ordered to undergo "10 days of complete rest." It means he will miss Victoria's four-game road tour next week.

Tonight's game against Kamloops, perhaps the youngest team in the league, will mark the end of an eight-game home stand for Victoria. Cougars having won all seven of the previous seven games, will try for eight tonight.

Mercredi delighted 971 hometown fans with his two goals and two assists, giving him 31 points, three more than teamate Harry Turk.

Fred Parent, Jan Kascak, Tom Gawryletz and Chad Campbell also scored for Penticton as the Broncos scored their seventh straight win.

TENTH SETBACK

Jim and John Dalzell and Jack McIlhargy replied for the Royals.

Nothing went right for Buckaroos at home as Vernon handed them their tenth loss of the season.

Gymnastic Meet Suffers At Gate

WINNIPEG (CP) — The three-day world invitational gymnastics tournament which concluded Thursday attracted about 12,000 spectators for the four shows.

Organizers of the event said a minimum of about 20,000 was needed to break even financially.

The organizers had been working on an $80,000 budget which included a $20,000 grant from the federal government.

Canadians Drop When Putts Don't

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — Canada was far out of contention in the World Cup golf matches going into today's third round, but the Australians picked up where they left off the previous day to take a whopping 10-stroke lead at the halfway mark.

Al Balding of Toronto was in at two-under par 70 on the 6,700-yard Jockey Club course for a two-round total of 143 but expressed disappointment with his putting.

He trails the leader, Argentina's Roberto de Vicenzo, by 12 strokes. De Vicenzo fired a 67 Friday to go with his opening-round 64 for a 131 total, keeping the Argentinians in second place in the team standings.

The defending champion United States entry dropped to fourth behind Denmark as Lee Trevino, the defending individual title holder, ballooned to a 73 for a two-day total of 143. His team-mate, Dave Stockton, had a 68 Friday and total of 140.

DENMARK THIRD

Denmark, third with a 282 total, is one stroke ahead of the U.S. France and Japan are tied for fifth at 285.

Balding, the 1968 individual winner, said: "I missed too many putts." His team-mate, Bob Cox Jr. of Vancouver, had the same problem but his score ballooned to a 77 for a 151 total.

"I just haven't putted since I got here," said Cox who was over par on seven holes, mostly as a result of his putting.

"I had several three putts on the back nine and wouldn't like to count the number of the other half," said Cox who felt he had good shots otherwise.

The Canadian aggregate of 294 was 27 shots behind the leaders—Aussies Bruce Devlin and David Graham—whose 267 aggregate was 21-under par.

Selke Says He Didn't Resign Post

OAKLAND (AP) — Frank Selke, out as general manager of California Golden Seals, said Friday: "I neither resigned nor quit."

Charles O. Finley, owner of the National Hockey League team, said earlier that Selke had resigned effective Nov. 10.

Selke said he had refused to sign a new contract offered by Finley, who bought the team last summer. Selke said his current four-year contract still is in force.

OFFERED LESS

The proposed contract was for one year, Selke said, and for "substanitally less" than he received per year under his contract signed in 1967 with the former Seals' owners.

Selke said Finley "has placed me in a position that makes it impossible for me to continue with the Seals."

But, he added, "I have advised him that I expect my existing contract to be honored."

Statz Boosts Scoring Lead

Selby Statz of the front-running Port Alberni Labatts has stretched his individual scoring lead in the Pacific Coast Amateur Hockey League to five points with 12 goals and 10 assists in nine games.

Brentwood Site Of Shuttle Meet

Saanich Open badminton championships are expected to attract players from various Northwest points when the annual tournament is held next week at the Brentwood Community Hall.

A popular event since early in the 1930s, the tournament will include handicap, veterans and "B" class events as well as the regular open events.

Sabres Stop Seals, Baun Back to Leafs, Habs Sign Ferguson

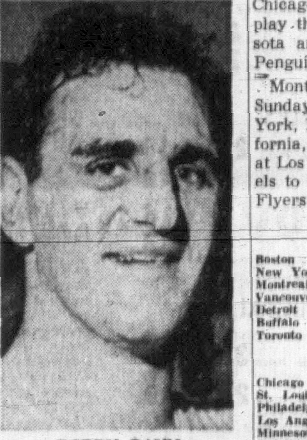
By The Canadian Press

Buffalo Sabres weren't exactly giant killers Friday night but they did stop one of the most surprising winning streaks in the National Hockey League.

Led by much-touted rookie Gil Perreault, who celebrated his 20th birthday with a goal and an assist, the Sabres upended California Golden Seals 4-2 at Buffalo and broke California's unbeaten streak at four games.

The Sabres snapped a seven-game losing streak with their third win of the season.

Paul Andrea, an ex-Seal, scored the winning goal in the third period, breaking a 2-2 tie. Andrea was obtained from California last week for the $30,000 waiver price.



BOBBY BAUN
. . . back to Toronto

Perreault gave the Sabres a 1-0 first-period lead with his eighth goal of the year. The Seals came back with two goals in the second period by Doug Jarrett and Gary Croteau before Skip Krake tied the game.

KEENAN MAKES SURE

Larry Keenan jammed in an insurance marker in the final period on a rebound shot by Tracy Pratt.

Buffalo, with its three wins and one tie in 15 starts for seven points, moved out of the East Division cellar, one point ahead of Toronto Maple Leafs and three back of fifth-place Detroit Red Wings.

The loss left California in last place in the West Division. The Seals have four wins, two ties and eight losses for 10 points, two less than Pittsburgh Penguins.

Elsewhere in the NHL forward John Ferguson said Friday he will return to Montreal Canadiens in time to be in the lineup next Tuesday against California.

Ferguson, 32, retired three days before the start of the schedule, saying at the time that his business interests were too strenuous for him to devote full time to hockey.

SITUATION CHANGES

The situation had changed since then, he said Friday, because of the sale and merger of the company in which he still retains an interest.

After meeting with Sam Pollock, Canadiens general manager, Ferguson said he would play the remainder of this season under terms of his old contract and that he had signed a new one for the 1971-72 season.

At Toronto, the Maple Leafs announced they had obtained defenceman Bobby Baun from St. Louis in a trade for left winger Brit Selby.

Baun, 34, who began his NHL career with Toronto in 1957, spent 11 seasons with the Leafs before being drafted by California, then Oakland Seals in 1967.

In games tonight, Montreal travels to St. Louis to meet the Blues, Toronto plays host to Boston Bruins, New York Rangers meet the Hawks at Chicago, Vancouver Canucks play the North Stars at Minnesota and California battles the Penguins at Pittsburgh.

Montreal travels to Buffalo Sunday, Toronto goes to New York, Boston plays host to California, Detroit meets the Kings at Los Angeles, Vancouver travels to Chicago and Philadelphia Flyers go to St. Louis.

Curling Tips

By Ron Northcott

(Three-time World Champion)

In today's situation, the score is tied in the very early ends of a game and blacks have last rock with their second or third shooting. Blacks have two choices. They can either hit "A" or play a freeze to whites' stone.

THE STRATEGY: At this early stage of the game, I would definitely hit "A." Hitting is a relatively easy shot and it won't make that much difference whether or not you stay.

Should you play the freeze, which is a tough shot at any time, and miss, your opponent will likely soon have two shots and be in a good position to steal the end.

Scoring here is not that important to you, but it hurts if your opponent steals. Don't gamble this early. Wait until you know the ice or until you are forced to take a chance.

TODAY'S TIP: The proper out-turn grip is optional and the player should use the grip that feels most natural. The secret appears to be in turning the handle to an angle of approximately 45 degrees to the right when lining up with the skip's broom.

It is very important that this angle be maintained until just before the rock is actually released. When releasing the rock at this angle, all that is required to put a turn on the rock is a very slight turn of the wrist.

Grief is usually encountered because, after completing the backswing as recommended, the curler has a tendency to straighten the handle of the rock on the forward swing.

Uvic Hoop Squad Nipped by Visitors

University of Victoria penalties proved costly Friday as the Vikings dropped a 71-69 exhibition verdict to a team from the Vancouver Senior Men's Basketball League.

The Bob Bell-coached Vikings were tagged with 37 personal fouls, with four Victoria players fouling out before game's end at the Uvic gymnasium.

Vancouver drew only 10 personals.

Trailing 40-33 at the half, Vikings twice came back in the late stages to tie the game. Vikings drew possession of the ball three times in the final two minutes but lost it on costly turnovers each occasion.

Sharpshooting Bob Molinski paced Vancouver with 24 points while Brent Watson tossed in 18.

Tommy Holmes led Victoria with 14 points as 11 of the 12 Vikings hit the scoresheet.

Vikings Nip Marauders On Penalty-Shot Skill

TORONTO — University of Victoria Vikings put accuracy into penalty shots Friday and edged a surprisingly-strong McMaster University squad 4-3 to advance into today's second round of the national collegiate soccer tournament at York University.

Vikings were to meet Loyola University of Montreal this morning with the winner advancing to Sunday's championship final.

Memorial University from St. John's, Newfoundland, picked off the other final berth Friday by blanking Laurentian University of Sudbury 2-0.

Vikings, missing the services of their leading scorer, Barry Moen, because of a head injury, had their hands full with the Marauders.

Teams finished the first 90 minutes of regulation play tied 1-1. After 20 scoreless minutes of overtime, they squared off on the spot to decide the game on penalty kicks.

Each side took five shots. McMaster, shooting first, was wide on two kicks, scored twice, and had another drive stopped by Viking netminder Dave Achurch.

Coach Wally Milligan's Vikings didn't miss. Alan Glenn, Peter Mason and Jim Marshall counted on Victoria's first three shots.

That was all they needed.

Oscar Dalli provided the Hamilton club with a first-half lead, and the stubborn Marauders' defence contained Vikings until the 85th minute, when Marshall connected on a long shot that grazed under the crossbar.

BOWLERS OF WEEK

Qualifying for rolloffs by winning Bowler-of-the-Week awards for fourth straight season are Sandra Wood (above) and Maureen King, who topped divisions during fifth week of eighth annual Times competition. Sandra captured women's fivepin award with 293-321-325—939 series in Monday Classic League at Gibson's Bowladrame while "Mo" topped women's tenpin section with 231-176-245—652 series in Victoria Senior League at Mayfair Lanes.

Stockers Happy Roger Is Aboard

Roger Thompson came to Victoria to try out with the B.C. Junior Hockey League's Cougars. The 20-year-old centre didn't make it with the Cougars, but Stockers North Americans are happy to have him on board.

Thompson figured in three goals Friday as Stockers defeated Butler Brothers 6-3 in Vancouver Island Hockey League action at the Sports Centre.

Victory kept Stockers in a tie for first place with the Victoria Cubs, who shut out University of Victoria Vikings 3-0 in the night's other game before a crowd of 1,013 fans.

Thompson scored twice and set up ex-Cougar Graham Brown for the game's first goal. Bill Allen, Gary Schall and Larry Meyers counted Stockers' other goals while Ted Sarkissian, with two, and Paul Bion scored for Butlers.

The shutout-minded Cubs, who have given up only eight goals in five games, rang up another as Dave Maynard kicked out 23 shots, three more than Viking netminder Robin Hay.

Don Blyth, Gord Neilson and Mark Purdy scored Cubs' goals.

PRICELESS GEN'S PRICE SETS AUCTION RECORD

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP)—A. B. Hancock Jr. set a world record at auction this week when he paid $395,000 for Priceless Gen, a seven-year-old broodmare from the Bieber-Jacobs Stable.

Hancock, owner of Claiborne Farm at Paris, Ky., said a decision on the future of the winner of $209,267 would be made later, "after I talk to my partner, William Haggin Perry."

Priceless Gen, now in foal to Vaguely Noble, is a half sister of Affectionately, dam of Personality, who won the Preakness, Wood Memorial, Jersey Derby, Woodward Stakes and Jim Dandy Stakes.

Second high price was the $220,000 paid by Charles W. Englehard for a nine-year-old mare in foal to Hail to Reason, sire of separate winners in each of racing's Triple Crown events.

CONTINUING bid to snap world record for victories in one year, jockey Sandy Hawley (above) rode three more winners at Toronto's Greenwood track Friday. Aiming at record of 485 wins set by Bill Shoemaker in 1953, Hawley now has 1970 total of 412.

Cup Event Sunday

Twelve teams square off at 10 a.m. Sunday in opening-rounds of the annual high school girls' Bridgman Cup field hockey tournament.

Norfolk House plays host to Mount View and Esquimalt for Section I play in the preliminary round-robin matches.

All other games, including semi-finals at 1:35 and the final at 2:15 p.m., will take place at Windsor Park.

Oak Bay, winner of the B.C. title in Kelowna last weekend, is the defending Bridgman Cup champion.

Preliminary match schedule:

10 a.m.—Victoria vs. Claremont, Cowichan vs. Strathcona, Oak Bay vs. St. Margaret's, Windsor Park; Norfolk House vs. Mount View, Norfolk House.

10:40 a.m. — Oak Bay vs. Mount Douglas, Queen Margaret's vs. Victoria, Crofton House vs. Cowichan, Windsor Park; Esquimalt vs. Norfolk House, Norfolk House.

11:20 a.m.—Claremont vs. Queen Margaret's, St. Margaret's vs. Mount Douglas, Strathcona vs. Crofton House, Windsor Park; Mount View vs. Esquimalt, Norfolk House.

Whites Retain Hockey Lead

Canadian Forces Base Whites retained a hold on first place in the Armed Forces Hockey League despite playing to a 2-2 draw with Island Combines while CFB Blues and HMC Ships tied 1-1.

George Fisher and George Vacheresse scored for Whites while Stew Walker and John Badyk replied for the Combines. Bill McFarlane's goal with 93 seconds remaining gave Blues their draw after Dale Leslie opened scoring for Ships at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Hornets Open Series Sunday

Saanich Hornets, winners of this season's regular season and play-off titles in the Vancouver Island Juvenile Football League, won't be expecting an easy romp Sunday when they open a two-game, total-point Series for the provincial championship against North Shore Wildcats.

Sunday's first game is scheduled for Centennial Stadium at 2 p.m. and the series will wind up in North Vancouver the following weekend.

Wildcats proved themselves tough in playoffs as they won the mainland's Big "4" Canadian League crown by defeating 1969 provincial-champion Surrey Rams 27-13 after whipping Blue Bombers 30-6 in the semi-final.

WILDCAT SPARKPLUG

Rams, Wildcats and Bombers finished the regular schedule in a tie for first place, but Rams were awarded the top spot and a bye into the final because they had the best points record.

Sixteen-year-old quarterback Bryon Elton is considered the sparkplug for the Cats, who normally work from an "I" formation that provides opportunities for running backs Doug James, Roger Hatch, Rick Peters and Chris Baldry. Currently recovering from injuries, Peters and Baldry are rated doubtful starters by coach Dave Roxborough.

Directed by coach Frank Hindle, Hornets fashioned a fine record this season as they won nine of 10 games and topped the Island circuit in both offence and defence.

Among players expected to pack big loads for Saanich Sunday are holdovers Bill McLeod, Don Owsianski, fullback Steve Parker, quarterback Jerry Kustaski, Ron Taylor, Jack Munch, Ed Avery and Jim Grey, and rookies Mike Shannon, Bob Gray, Matt Flynn and Bruce Paisley.

Don Leo Tackles Bulldog For Title

Don Leo Jonathan will be bidding to regain the Pacific Coast wrestling championship from Bulldog Brown in the main bout of a professional card Tuesday in Memorial Arena.

In other bouts, starting at 8 p.m. Steven Little Bear tangles with Chatti Yokuchi, Duncan McTavish battles Yasu Fuji and Dan Kroffat sides with Bill Cody in a tag-team match against Pancho Lopez and Bud Rattel.

THE LASKER MEMORIAL

At the time of World Champion Dr. Emmanuel Lasker's death in 1941, Albert Einstein wrote of him: "There are few who show such warm feelings for their fellow men and at the same time are so strongly independent. I am thankful for the many hours spent with this highly idealistic independent man."

Dr. Lasker was indeed widely admired, so much so that an international tournament was held last year in East Berlin to commemorate the 100th anniversary of his birth. It was won by Wolfgang Uhlmann, East Germany, and many, and Saizew, U.S.S.R., each scoring 10½ pionts out of 15.

There followed: Suetin, U.S.S.R, 9 ½; Barczay, Hungary and Wasjukov, U.S.S.R., 9 each; Fuchs, East Germany, and Saizew, U.S.S.R., 8½ each; Malich, East Germany, Csom, Hungary, 8 each; Mimic, Yugoslavia, 6½; Zinn and Hennings, both East Germany, 6 each; Radovici, Romania, 5½; Espig and Schoneberg, both East Germany, 5 points each, and Ortega, Cuba, 4½.

Salo Flohr, U.S.S.R., was the chief judge.

Bronstein, a Grandmaster and non-smoker, had made up his mind that he was going to win this one all by himself. For that reason, he brought along a large, strong cigar, which he showed to everyone.

He said he was going to smoke it, just as Lasker used to, as soon as he had won the event. This did not come to pass. He shared first place with another Grandmaster and non-smoker, Uhlmann.

Flohr suggested that they puff on it together. They somehow did not reach an agreement on Flohr's suggestion. Neither did they come to any agreement in their individual battle that took place in the twelfth round.

Nixon Balks At Proposed Telecast

WASHINGTON (CP) — President Nixon will not take part in a proposed international religious telecast at Christmas with Queen Elizabeth because of a possible church-state conflict, it was learned Friday.

As a result, the whole idea has been called off.

An official at Washington Cathedral, the Episcopal (Anglican) centre here, said the White House had declined an invitation "with thanks" because it might involve the president in a conflict over constitutional separation of church and state in the U.S.

The plan originated with Washington Cathedral and had been discussed "for several years," the official said. But it had never gone beyond an informal stage.

The idea was for simultaneous services at the cathedral here and at Westminster Abbey in London, linked by satellite telecast.

Nixon, a Quaker who often attends other denominations' services, would have been at the Washington service while the Queen would have attended the Abbey service.

WEEK'S WORK

Many varieties of chrysanthemums must be wintered in a coldframe away from drenching rain and hard frost. Cuttings are taken in spring for rooting or roots may then be divided for replanting.

Check all small plants put in this fall to see they are firm. Stocks and wallflowers loosened by wind, rain or frost will not bloom well.

Continue new plantings of fruit trees, roses, ornamental trees, and most kinds of shrubs.

Large permanent plants for gardens with space or where numbers of smaller plants are not wanted: Bamboo, either tall or dwarf; green or variegated; Pampas-grass; the hardy palm, Chamaerops humilis; yucca. Don't plant into lawn areas, because of feeding and weeding the lawn.

Cut down the perennial aster stems now (Michaelmas-daisies), and all other perennials which have finished blooming.

Set a few early potatoes into large deep pots (10 to 12 in. size), using Sharps Express or similar early. Grow as experiment in frost free greenhouse or protected coldframe.

Wrap outside water taps against frost, and pipes into greenhouse.

TIPS FOR HOME GARDENERS

'No Digging' Theory Drawing Gardener Interest

By JACK BEASTALL

The "no-digging" concept of gardening again seems to be attracting interest as it did some 30 to 40 years ago. Few know anything about the theory involved. The interest is probably stimulated by the built-in laziness with which all humans are endowed.

The idea of sowing seeds and gathering armsful of produce and flowers without any labor preparing the soil is many gardeners' idea of paradise.

But the no-digging theory is not from the brain of a lazy man, it is one of the theories designed to maintain the fertility and balance of our soils.

It was not an effort to save labor but rather an effort to preserve and increase the population of soil organisms so vital to maintaining a living soil that could tolerate and overcome the abuses of man.

Generations of gardeners had religiously spaded their gardens, turning the so-called good top-soil down where the roots would benefit and bringing the poorer lower soil to the surface to be improved by the action of the elements.

When the presence of bacteria was discovered it was found that some can perform their complex job only in the presence of a certain amount of air (aerobic bacteria) while others needed conditions devoid of air (non-aerobic).

Naturally, the aerobic group was confined to near the surface, and the non-aerobic at lower levels where air did not penetrate. When man takes a spade or plow and inverts the soil, what happens?

The answer is what we would expect; both forms die when their conditions are reversed and a considerable time must elapse before the population is replaced. During this time both soil and plants have to get along without the benefit of bacterial action.

A reasonable way around this problem seemed to be suggested by nature. On wild ground there is no inversion of the soil, only a slow building up of a layer of compost on the surface, yet such soils can support a far larger concentration of plants to the square foot than any gardener could hope to produce.

Experiments were conducted in which a layer of composted garden wastes was spread on the surface and seed sown directly into this layer without disturbing the soil. The results over a period of years were encouraging enough to capture the interest of gardeners.

However, the gardener soon discovered there was more physical labor involved than the older method of turning the soil.

To cover a garden with one foot of compost even once a year required gathering an enormous amount of waste material, making large heaps, turning to hasten the rotting down, and a lot of wheeling and spreading, all of which consumed hours of labor throughout the year.

Obviously, those looking for an easy way of gardening soon gave up in disgust and became strong opponents of the non-digging principle.

The theory is sound, and what is more, it works providing the gardener has the right kind of soil to start with.

My first no-digging experiment was on a soil predominately clay. Such a soil lacks humus, is slow to give up its moisture, and intractable when almost dry.

Results were good as long as the roots remained in the meagre layer of compost I was able to produce, but they failed to penetrate the compacted clay beneath and the plants wilted in the warmth of summer.

It then dawned on me that the experiments I had read were conducted on soils of the old world which had been cultivated and manured for hundreds of years, not on a clay which supported timber trees a little more than 50 years ago.

Starting with a soil in "good heart," deeply dug and rich in humus, the no-digging theory is practicable, but not on our west coast clay.

But don't let me discourage you. If you live in one of the local areas where sand and gravel predominates, you have an ideal medium with which to start.

First you will need to spend a few years adding all the humus you can find to your present soil. This will have a binding action and make the soil more water retentive. When the humus content is sufficient you can cease turning the soil and start the laying on of compost into which all seeds will be started. As this layer of humus increases in depth so all need for digging will disappear.

Clay soil could be handled the same way but it would take many more years incorporating vast quantities of humus before laying aside the spade.

Side benefits of no-digging are the control of weeds since we are not bringing to the surface the seeds we buried last year, and lower water bills because the surface is not exposed to wind and sun.

These benefits were appreciated by those who attempted the no-digging experiment and led to the more recent development of mulch paper, and eventually to a surface covering of black polythene film, both of which presented watering problems in our dry summers.

A far better idea used by some gardeners was covering the soil between plants with old sacks and sacking. Water penetrates easily, weeds are suppressed, and the old sacks rot down to form humus. By adding a new layer each year a surface mulch of decomposing material soon developed. But today, sacks are rapidly disappearing.

Yet we still have newspapers printed on wood-pulp products which will also rot down and provide a layer of humus. The present concern over pollution has started investigation into reprocessing discarded materials and we may soon have processed paper and cardboard offered for sale as a soil improver.

The home gardener could start now with newspapers and soon have a soil suitable for a no-digging experiment.

Pinto
Three reasons why . . .
Pinto is no ordinary small car.
Reason No. 1—Its engines are made in Germany and England by Ford of Europe. Over 4,000,000 of these engines have been produced. A modified version powers the famous Lola and Lotus racing car.
These engines give you outstanding reliability and performance.
Reason No. 2—The steering is great. It's called rack and pinion. No other North American car has it—and for imports—just Jaguar, Ferrari and Porche.
Rack and pinion steering gives you excellent handling, quick turning. But that's not all. Reason No. 3—Pinto also has the widest track in the small car field: this means its wheels are wider apart for much better stability when passing, turning or in strong wind.

WEEKEND'S TOP TV SHOWS

Tonight

COUNTRYTIME. 7:30 p.m., Channels 2 and 6. Country singers Stu Phillips and Bill Gosse are the guests on tonight's show. Songs include Crystal Chandeliers by Stu, The Hurt Goes On by regular Myrna Lorrie and I Just Came to Get My Baby Out of Here, by Bill.

MISSION: IMPOSSIBLE. 7:30 p.m., Channels 7 and 12. The usually cool on-top image of the IMF forces is reversed tonight when, for a time, it looks so bad for them that they consider aborting their mission. They are behind the Iron Curtain, assigned to bring out a prototype of a new weapon which is sectionalized and completely useless without all parts. The piece has fallen into the hands of a nightclub owner and he is wily enough to make sure that the sections are well separated.

THE ANDY WILLIAMS SHOW. 7:30 p.m., Channel 5. It's mostly music tonight, with a liberal sprinkling of Laugh-In type comedy, as Leslie Uggams, Ken Berry and Claudine Longet star. The two ladies team up for a duet to "Frere Jacques" with Charlie Callas joining in as Captain Weird. Other features: Andy and Claudine dueting "Sing That Song Again" in French and English; Ken Berry's "The Green, Green Grass of Home" and Andy's "Fire and Rain" and "The Very Thought of You."

MARY TYLER MOORE. 8 p.m., Channel 8; 9:30, Channel 7. The fast friendship between Mary and Rhoda is shaken to its foundations for the classic reason . . . jealousy. Rhoda has a new boy friend and she makes one small but vital mistake. She introduces him to Mary, and it's love at first sight.

MY THREE SONS. 8:30 p.m., Channels 7 and 12. You must say for this series, that when its producers decided to have a "different" series wedding, they succeeded. The elopement to Las Vegas is anything but dew drops and roses for Chip and Polly. The weather is against them, their car cuts out on them, and even their honeymoon hideaway has changed to a singles-only policy. Only true love could prevail.

THE LAWRENCE WELK SHOW. 8:30 p.m. Channel 4. The sound of the big bands is spotlighted tonight with features including, "Let's Dance," "Woodchoppers' Ball," "Sentimental Journey," "The Waltz Your Saved for Me" and "My Time Is Your Time."

THE MOST DEADLY GAME. 9:30 p.m., Channel 4. "Photo Finish". One of the better scripts for this series has Yvette Mimieux in her most precarious spot, though safe and sound to the eye of the casual onlooker. It begins with some correspondence from a murderer who begs the investigators to capture him before he kills again. He includes several photos of victims. Vanessa is set up as a decoy to lure him out. The real chills begin when they receive another letter, this one containing a photo of Vanessa in the death pose he predicts for her.

MANNIX. 10 p.m., Channel 7. Only a TV detective could do it; stop for a cup of coffee in a roadside cafe and quickly find himself enmeshed in a bloody syndicate war. The focal point is the cafe owner, a comely lady who you'll remember as Alice of "Alice's Restaurant." Pat Quinn is her name.

Sunday

GUNSMOKE. 5:30 p.m., Channels 6 and 8. Yaphet Kotto and Slim Pickens are guest stars in this episode, titled The Scavengers. Kotto plays Pinney Biggs, who swears he was the survivor of an Indian massacre. Pickens is a ghoulish buffalo hunter who captured the Indians but can only claim his reward if Pinney sticks to his tale.

THE WONDERFUL WORLD OF DISNEY. 6 p.m., Channel 2; 7:30, Channel 5. "Monkeys Go Home" (Part 1). Dean Jones, Yvette Mimieux and Maurice Chevalier star in this two-parter that is again animal-oriented with some political overtones. Jones plays an American who arrives in a French village to claim an inheritance, an olive farm. He balks at the custom of employing a family to harvest his crop, and instead he brings in a quartet of chimpanzees for the job. The villagers do not take kindly to the idea for their displacement.

SPECIAL. 7 p.m., Channels 2 and 6. Horton Hears a Who. Hans Conried narrates this rhyming cartoon, based on the Dr. Seuss children's story. Horton the kind-hearted elephant is the only hope for the microscopic land of Who-ville. He staves off such heavies as the dastardly Wickersham brothers and Vlad Vlad-i-koff, the black-bottomed eagle.

THE YOUNG REBELS. 7 p.m., Channel 4. "Age of Independence," David Soul guests as a young Captain John Marshall, tonight's unwitting antagonist who is to become the fourth Chief Supreme Court Justice of the new nation. Unaware of the true identities of the Yankee Doodle Trio, he pushes Jeremy and company to join the Continental Army, which of course they cannot do. His persuasion only results in putting the spotlight on the three for their unwillingness to participate in the revolution.

HOGAN'S HEROES. 7:30 p.m., Channel 7. The violin virtuosity of Col. Klink is tonight's theme and the tool used by the heroes in their latest mission. There's a super-secret Gestapo meeting taking place at the prison camp and the boys want to attend. They use a concert by Klink as their cover.

THE BILL COSBY SHOW. 7:30 p.m., Channels 2 and 6; 8:30, Channel 5. "The Deluge" (Part 1). Lovely Gloria Foster stars in the first of a two-part episode that promises to give Chet Kincaid the most chilling experience of his life. She is an expectant mother with a three-way problem and a single solution. Her baby is nearly due, her husband is away and a torrential rain has prevented her from reaching help, either doctor or hospital. Fortunately, she has a good neighbor named Chet Kincaid.

THE KLOWNS. 8 p.m., Channel 4. A Ringling Bros., Barnum and Bailey presentation. This is essentially a circus show, and though you've seen many on TV before, this one tops them all. It stars Sammy Davis Jr., taking us on a backstage trip at the circus as well as watching some of the big-top main attractions in action. The title stars are two girls and four boys, the Klowns, learning the pratfalls and buffoonery that will make up their profession. There's also lovely Juliet Prowse, appearing with the sextet in "Be a Clown" and joining Sammy in tramp costume for "If My Friends Could See Me Now." Among the circus acts are Charley Baumann and his Royal Bengal Tigers and the Flying Gaonas. One of the unique attractions is the in-and-out antics of one quiet clown who works entirely in pantomime, and who, if you look closely, you'll recognize as Jerry Lewis.

BONANZA. 9 p.m., Channel 5. "El Jefe." A run-of-the-mill hayburner about a sheriff who is "owned" by the local land baron. Between the two they have fixed a murder charge against a friend of the Cartwrights, who not only think him innocent but can provide a witness to prove it. When the witness is killed, the Cartwrights find themselves in trouble for harboring a criminal.

THE SUNDAY NIGHT MOVIE. 9 p.m., Channel 4. "The Brotherhood" (1968). Kirk Douglas stars in this muscle-bound melodrama based on the blood ties of a crime syndicate. It's tense, taut and more than a bit bloody, and could have been better had it been toned down. Douglas and Alex Cord are brothers working in the syndicate. Cord is the younger brother, whose father-in-law, a member of the board, plans to depose the older brother and elevate the younger. While this is in progress, Douglas learns that the same man was responsible for his father's death and Douglas kills him. While in exile in Sicily, he's told his younger brother has been named his assassin by the syndicate. Irene Papas, Luther Adler, Susan Strasberg and Eduardo Ciannelli are featured.

THE BOLD ONES. 10 p.m., Channel 5. Series star John Saxon gets the starring role in a teleplay that combines medical ethics with legal consequences. James Broderick is a small-town doctor who is believed to have committed a serious surgical blunder on a woman patient. Her husband openly accuses the doctor and Dr. Stuart (Saxon) is intent on backing him up with formal charges. He isn't aware of the total consequences of that action.

'NOW WE'RE ONLY SCRATCHING SURFACE'

Cable 10 Plans to Mirror the Community

Officials at Victoria Cablevision Ltd. say a void exists in local television programming.

They say they're going to fill it. What they'll fill it with is still unclear. Company president Les Curran and program director Bob Aylward admit that their fledgling TV station, Cable 10, is just emerging into the post natal stage.

They're experimenting, they say, to see what capital region viewers want and to learn their own capacity to meet those needs.

Cable 10 began broadcasting Monday, Nov. 2. Prior to this, local viewers had to settle for a monotonous diet of rotating weather information dials and taped background music piped in from a local radio station.

Though Victoria Cablevision is nearly 11 years old, it has performed, in Curran's phrase, a passive role limited to supplying regional viewers with cabled transmission of other TV stations in Victoria, Vancouver, Bellingham, Seattle and Tacoma.

Today, 43,000 householders subscribe to this service. Curran says his company provides the region with the most stations and the best quality reception in Canada.

But this passive operation became active when, in 1969, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission ruled that cable systems had to start broadcasting.

"Two years ago, we never believed this would be possible. There was definitely a void; we thought we could fill it; but until a year or so ago, we weren't permitted to do it," Curran said.

Now that cable systems in Canada have a federal broadcasting mandate, what is Cable 10 planning to do?

Aylward says Cable 10 programming will mirror the community.

"What we want to do is involve as many people in the community as we can, right in front of our cameras."

Cable 10 is on the air 17½ hours a week, Monday to Friday. The majority of that time, 10 hours is devoted to local programming.

Heading the day's schedule during the week is a one-hour show, Ladies First, with hostess Cathy Barker. The show features such topics as fashions, flowers and special guests.

Another local program is You and the Law, a half-hour show at 6:30 p.m. Tuesdays, sponsored by the Saanich police department with host Sgt. Bill Chisholm.

Aylward says this program aims to explain in layman's terms the citizens' relations to police and law.

Victoria Outdoorsman, five days weekly at 7 p.m., is a half-hour feature on local sailing, fishing, hunting, powerboating and gardening activities.

Cable Ten Forum, Mondays and Thursdays at 7:30 p.m., is an hour-long program featuring local people discussing issues and their work in the community.

For example, the first forum had Greater Victoria School District special councillors and the school psychologist discussing how parents can assist their children's emotional growth.

Aylward says future plans include local sporting events from Centennial Stadium, possibly taped plays performed at Uvic's Phoenix Theatre and a series scheduled for Jan. 1 involving the Greater Victoria Art Gallery, the Victoria Conservatory of Music and the Victoria United Nations Association.

Curran says the company does not plan to produce its own daily news programs. At best, he says, Cable 10 may have a weekly news roundup.

Victoria Cablevision does not pay for local talent appearing on the air, because Curran says the company cannot afford to.

He says that the CRTC has not permitted cable systems to solicit advertising. This may come in a few years, Curran says. But until then, he has no plans to compete with CHEK-TV, Channel 6, and the city's three radio stations and two daily newspapers.

Nor does Victoria Cablevision intend to do documentary work on the region. The company's facilities do not yet permit much outdoor TV work.

Curran says one of the problems shooting documentaries is that once they're shown, they're dead. Instead, Cable 10 will draw upon the library at the National Film Board's Victoria office for documentaries.

"We can see doing things as air-sea rescue, coast guard . . . who knows what they actually do?"

CRTC broadcasting policy for cable systems does not give strict programming guidelines.

Curran says each cable system will be judged by the CRTC on an "individual merit basis." This leaves Cable 10 more free to experiment, free to begin with some amateurish programming, he says.

Aylward says it may be another year before Cable 10 gets its cameras out on the street.

"We're only scratching the surface to start with."

A Friendly Dog

NEW CASTLE, Del. (AP) — A boxer dog named J.B. fussed over four bandits who were friendly to him. He licked their trouser legs while his master was being robbed of $8,000 in cash and $15,000 in jewelry, J.B.s owner, James D. Boines, said he was less than pleased with the dog. In 1966, Boines was ordered to pay a customer at his restaurant $575 in damages after the man was bitten by J.B.

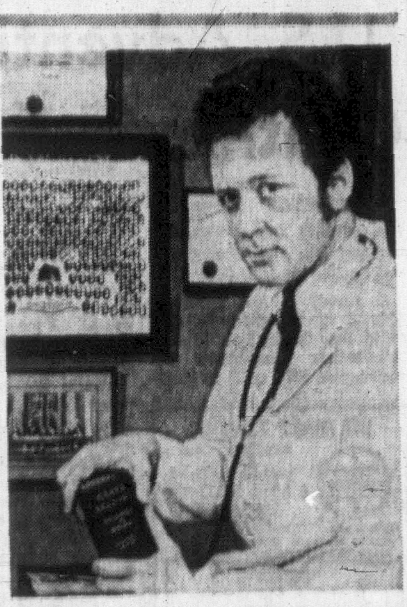
CORWIN BACK



TORONTO — The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's medical series, Corwin, is returning to the network beginning Sunday, Nov. 22, according to a network release.

It will be carried on Channels 2 and 6 at 9 p.m. for seven consecutive weeks. Corwin, which made its debut as a mini-series last season, features actor John Horton (right) as the doctor.

The new episodes will also feature such prominent stars as the late Ed Begley, who plays a mailman faced with crippling illness in the first episode, Gordon Pinsent, Susan Oliver, Linda Goranson, Edward Binns and Gerard Parkes.

U.S. TV BATTLE CRY

'Get Me a Canadian!'

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — "Get me a Canadian!"

That is the battle cry of stars and producers of American television shows who hope to bolster their Neilsen ratings.

In the past five years there has been an astonishing surge of Canadian writers, directors and performers to Hollywood where they can be found in virtually every capacity.

There are, of course, the stars: Donald Sutherland, Lorne Greene, Robert Goulet, Genevieve Bujold, Christopher Plummer, Michael Sarrazin and others.

Less obvious and perhaps more influential are the Canadians behind the scenes who have emigrated south from Ontario, Montreal, British Columbia and other Canadian bastions of the arts.

Alan Manning, head writer for "The Rowan and Martin Laugh-In," is an American who worked for nine years for the CBC in Toronto.

"Canada is the greatest training ground I know of for writers and performing talent, not to mention directors," he said.

Manning was a writer of dramas and comedy shows as well as a panelist on a quiz show.

He believes, along with others, that Canadians have a fresh sense of humor and a wry insight into the quirks of their neighbors south of the border. They can combine an insider's understanding and an outsider's detachment.

Thus, Paul Wayne is the key writer on "The Carol Burnett Show." Andy Williams' weekly hour is largely the work of Alan Blye and Chris Beard, both Canadians.

"The Glen Campbell Show" is produced by Al Rogers and Rich Eustis. They are Canadians, too.

Sandy Stern is one of the most prolific writers in Hollywood. He's a Canadian who wrote the controversial two-part "Ironside" series dealing with terrorist bombings in Montreal.

Still another Canadian is Bernie Slade, who created this season's "The Partridge Family" and the defunct "Love on a Rooftop."

Others from the land of the maple leaf are John Aylesworth and Frank Peppiatt, who head Youngstreet Productions, responsible for "Hee Haw" and the John Wayne television special to be seen next month.

These newcomers are shaping much of Hollywood's television fare.

Some Religious Training May Be Harmful to a Child

By LOUIS CASSELS
UPI Religion Writer

The view is widely held among parents that any religious training a child receives is bound to do him some good.

But it doesn't necessarily work that way. Some kinds of religious training, although well intended, may be very harmful to a child's spiritual development.

Take, for example, the matter of prayer. Parents with any degree of personal faith usually make an effort to teach their children to "say their prayers."

No one would deny the value of helping a child form the habit of daily prayer from his earliest years. But it matters enormously how a child is taught to think of prayer.

A mistaken view of prayer, implanted or encouraged by parents, may cause a youngster to become an atheist in his teens.

In a recent issue of the Christian Herald, religious educator Better Garton Ulrich recounted the story of a mother who couldn't comprehend why her college-age son had rejected belief in God.

The mother "recalled fondly how, as a small child, her son had prayed with unquestioning faith that God would grant him a bicycle. It was obvious from the tone of her reminiscences that the parents, in buying him the bicycle, had deliberately encouraged the child to believe that if he only prayed believingly enough, his prayers would be granted."

This kind of "religious training" is disastrous because it teaches a child to think of prayer as a letter to a heavenly Santa Claus. It may work for a while, but sooner or later the child will pray for things the parents don't know about, or cannot provide. He will then conclude either that there is no God, or, worse, that God exists but doesn't love him any more.

Even if a child should somehow escape this kind of disenchantment, he will never be able to grow into a mature religious faith so long as he thinks of God as a wish-granter. For any such concept gets the man-God relationship exactly backwards. Instead of seeing himself as the creature and servant of God, a child see himself as the centre of the universe, and sees God as a genie whose role is to protect and please him.

This doesn't mean that a child should be discouraged from asking God for things — including bicycles.

Jesus habitually addressed God as "Father in Heaven."

The term can be a pitfall for children if they're allowed to form anthropomorphic images of God. But it is not difficult for parents to make clear that even though God does not look like a man, he does deal with his human children in the manner of a loving father.

This concept of God as father teaches a child to acknowledge his dependence on God and at the same time prepares him for the possibility of getting no for an answer occasionally.

"A child does not cease to love and trust his parents merely because they sometimes refuse to give him what he wants," observes Miss Ulrich. "In fact, as he matures in understanding, he learns, either by the teaching of his parents or through experience, that often it is because his parents love him that they refuse some of his requests.

The lesson can be made clearer by teaching a child to conclude his prayers as Jesus did by saying: "Not my will but Thine be done." This short sentence, whenever it is said sincerely, encompasses the deepest truths that a human being can learn, at any age, about his relationship to God. Implicit in it is the faith that God can always be trusted to watch over us with a loving concern for our ultimate best interests. And it also constitutes a humble acknowledgment that it is God's will, not ours, that really matters, for this is His universe and we exist solely because we are part of His creative purpose.

OBSERVATIONS gleaned from studies this year in the Pacific will be presented Monday night to the University Extension Association of Victoria by Dr. Bryan H. Farrell, professor of geography at the University of Victoria. During his prolonged tour, Dr. Farrell concerned himself primarily with attitudes toward land in Fiji, Hawaii and New Zealand, but included in his travels visits to French Polynesia, Australia, New Guinea, Hong Kong and Japan. His lecture, open to the public, will start at 8:15 in Room 144, MacLaurin Building.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

All Yearn for Healing

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

Each of us experiences at times a strong desire for healing. And I am not thinking mainly of the kind of healing we yearn for when we suffer bodily pain and discomfort.

I am thinking more of our yearning for healing from anxiety and depression and despair, healing from confusion and frustration and uncertainty about the meaning of human existence, about the purpose of our lives.

Actually, I am thinking about what the Bible calls "salvation." And here I do not have in mind simply an emotional experience with the comforting assurance that one has got it made with God. Salvation, in biblical thought, is not a condition or an achievement, but, rather, an ongoing process.

Salvation is in your awareness of the power and love of God in your life, in awareness of your acceptance by God despite your unacceptableness, in awareness that by faith in God you can be helped to fulness of life. It is significant that our English word "salvation" comes from the Latin "salvus", which means, simply, "healed."

Many are the ways in which we seek healing from the anxiety and despair and confusion which the menaces of today engender in our hearts.

Some of us seek relief through psychotherapy and other emotion-managing techniques.

Some of us embrace political ideologies which seem to offer a total philosophy of life. Some of our brightest and most capable people strive for meaning and fulfilment in a cool, efficient, rational approach to life — a sort of latter-day Stoicism.

Others seek help, and some seem to find it, in mystical religions, generally imported from Asia and processed in passage for Western use. And what do you make of the current astrology craze — the Age-of-Aquarius bit and all that?

Some of us try to find the healing we need in art and music and drama and poetry — and it cannot be denied that there is some healing in such enterprises.

Whatever else these various movements may represent and express, they can be taken as evidence of the yearning for healing, the yearning for salvation, in man's heart today.

Some, of course, simply give up, fearing that there is no real healing anywhere. They sometimes try to numb their anxieties and deaden their despair by the excessive use of alcohol and the dangerously careless use of drugs.

Is Christian faith relevant, therapeutically relevant, to this situation? Can it convey healing for the hurts of man's heart?

Remember that Jesus said, "It is not the healthy that need a doctor, but the sick . . . I did not come to invite virtuous people, but sinners." (Matthew 9:12, 13. New English Bible.)

And in this context we can interpret the word "sinners" as pertaining not merely to those who offend against moral laws and conventions but to all of us whose self-centredness and morbid self-concern takes us into anxiety and despair and confusion and keep us from finding the way to healing, to fulfilment, to salvation.

Through the centuries many have found healing through faith in Jesus Christ and in commitment to his purposes. It is method which has been validated in the arena of the practical. Perhaps it will work for you.

U.S. Adventists Contribute $351

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Seventh Day Adventists continue to be America's "giving-est" Protestants.

A survey by the National Council of Churches showed today that the nation's 400,000 Adventists contributed an average of $351 each to their churches during the 1969 fiscal year.

The only denomination which even came close to matching that per capita giving figure was the Evangelical Free Church of America. Its 64,000 members gave an average of $307.

Among the big Protestant denominations (one million members and up), the most liberal were the Southern Presbyterians, whose contributions averaged $140 for every man, woman and child.

Following in order were: Disciples of Christ (Christian churches), $118; United Presbyterians, $111; American Lutherans, $101; Lutheran Church in America, $95; United Church of Christ, $90; Missouri Synod Lutherans, $85; Southern Baptists, $73, and Episcopalians, $60.

Figures were not available for the United Methodist Church.

The nation's largest religious body, the Roman Catholic Church, does not publish figures on contributions on a national basis.

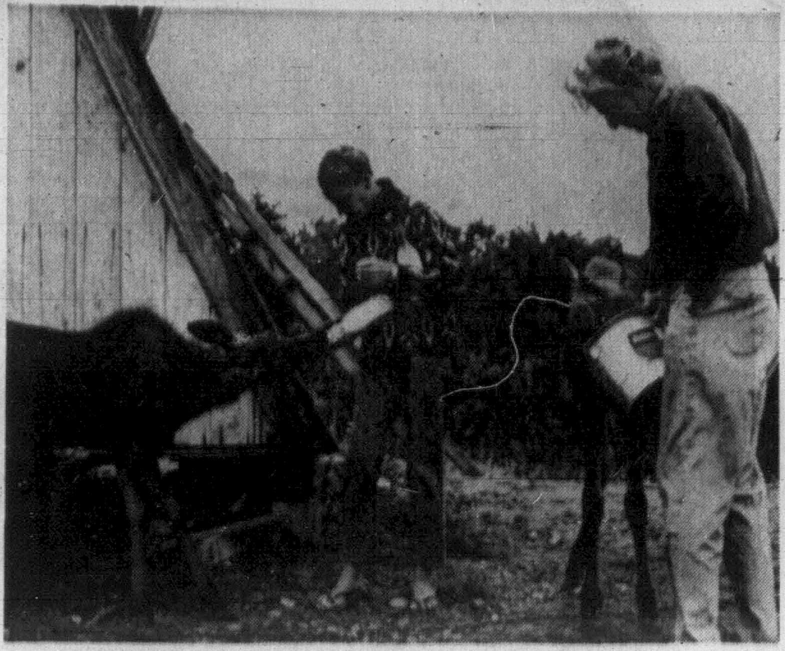
After Challenging the Oceans Couple 'Retires' in Alberta

By PAT DUFOUR



SMEETONS . . . with a friend

Shinnying down fire poles and running a game farm may not sound like jobs for a retired couple.

But for Miles and Beryl Smeeton, it's as natural as the sun setting at the end of a day.

The former Salt Spring couple, who for years have challenged the oceans of the world in their ketch Tzu-Hang, "swallowed the anchor" in April, heading for Alberta and a life in the country.

"But," as Beryl Smeeton says, "you just shouldn't stagnate and do nothing when you retire. We look on retirement as another beginning—another challenge."

The Smeetons are now settled on property they bought in 1966, 14 miles northwest of Cochrane, 160 acres of which they've set aside as a game farm, and another 320 acres as pasture land.

Why a game farm?

"We became concerned about conservation in the days when our daughter, Cleo, worked at the Calgary and Vancouver zoos. Now we have a chance to do something about it."

Both 64, the Smeetons have tackled their new project with the same zest that kept them going during Tzu-Hang's doubling of the Horn.

They lived in a small A-frame on the property until the shell of their new home was completed. They've now moved into the big house and are completing the inside structure and are making their furniture.

To descent to the main floor of the house, the Smeetons installed an iron fire pole.

"It's just plain common sense to use a pole—it's so much faster than stairs. We wanted to have a brass pole first, but it was so expensive, and, thinking it over, the descents might have been just a shade too fast!"

Beginning the game farm was "a bit chancey, financially," says Mrs. Smeeton.

"In Alberta it's illegal to have any indigenous animals without a game farm licence. You have to have at least 80 acres fenced seven feet high with No. 1 wire. That costs money—and you still run the risk of not being granted a licence."

Once the Smeetons had their licence, the next problem was to get some stock.

"We knew that moose were hard to raise in captivity, many had died at the Calgary zoo. It must be the bugs you attract when there are lots of people and exotic animals around. We wanted to see what we could do in a more natural environment."

Their first chance came at 10 p.m. June 17.

"The director of the zoo phoned us to say they had a four-week-old female that had been abandoned by her mother. Would we like her?"

The next day Patrishkin became the first moose on the Smeeton farm.

It was Dominion Day before a second moose was added.

Dubbed Peterkin, he was badly mauled after having been caught in barbed wire.

Both have survived and adapted themselves to an environment that finds them sharing the acres with Smeeton's horses and Pwe, the 17-year-old Siamese former ship's cat on Tzu-Hang.

He appears to have no yearning for his "sea legs" and treats the moose as family.

How about the Smeetons, do they long for the days when the seas slapped Tzu-Hang's hull and the wind sang in her rigging?

"Not at all. You can look up at a prairie sky and the clouds make you feel that you are back on the ocean, with the wind coming along and things bending."

Smeeton has written six books on their wanderings. The last appears this month.

Will there be another?

There will—but only Patrishkin and Peterkin can decide the plot.

"Miles plans to write a book, based on them, if and when they have their first calf.

"The book will be called The Unforsaken."

Will there be other animals?

"Definitely, but we intend to build slow, it's like putting in a basement.

"You can't throw things up in a hurry. Good things take time."

'We Want to Bring Blues Back to Black Community'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Whether the blues can go home again is still an open question after the first Washington blues festival.

Conceived as an attempt to reawaken Black consciousness to the folk music which has become a powerful art form, the festival was financially successful but drew mostly white listeners during a three-night stand last week.

"We want to bring the blues back to the Black community," said Topper Carew, organizer of the festival, at its onset, "and show the people that young Blacks still care about the music."

The predominance of whites, mostly students, may have been due in part to steep ticket prices and lack of publicity in the Black community, particularly on the campus of Howard University where the festival was held.

At the opening Thursday night concert some Blacks, who could not be admitted because of the sellout, complained about being turned away while whites were seated. However, Carew stated that tickets were sold indiscriminately.

From the technical aspect the festival got off to a rocky start, but Carew and members of his group, the New Thing Art and Architecture Center, soon learned to cope with its handling.

"We learned a lot about promotion," he said, "and I hope we showed that Blacks can run a festival." By the second night, the scheduling of musicians was straightened out, and hangers-on behind the stage were eliminated.

One problem that remained, however, was the length of the concerts, which averaged about six hours apiece. Many musicians had to wait all night to perform, and, no matter how excellent the music, listeners could hardly help being oversaturated.

Highlights of the festival, besides appearances by stars such as B. B. King, Muddy Waters and Richie Havens, were performances by J. B. Hutto and his Hawks, the African Heritage Dancers and a closing jam session Saturday featuring Junior Wells and Buddy Guy.

The Commodore Makes a Last Bid to Bail Out Appeal

A sign at the Hillside Shopping Centre foretells the arrival of Santa Claus.

Though the date is only Nov. 14, the Christmas season is creeping toward us. Unlike children, United Appeal staff and agencies cannot wait until Dec. 25.

Time is running out on the campaign. Commodore R. V. Henning, campaign chairman, said Friday that he cannot keep the Appeal running beyond Dec. 5.

When the Appeal began seven weeks ago, he had hoped to run a tight, brisk drive. Completion target date then was Oct. 31.

But donations arrived slowly. And it was not until the last two weeks in October that campaign totals began to look respectable.

Figures for Friday, Nov. 13, show that the Appeal has raised $482,947, 68.9 per cent of its hoped-for total of $701,314.

To reach that total, the campaign must average $70,000 a week, or 10 per cent of its total goal in each of the three remaining weeks.

This week, donations went up approximately five per cent. All these statistics indicate that the Appeal may not reach its goal. And there are other hard facts contributing to this possibility.

Henning said that the key division of the campaign, the large corporations, needs at least $120,000 more if it is to match what Community Chest planners thought it could earlier this year.

Other divisions are lagging. These include, construction — slammed by labor-management disputes in the spring — general firms, professional, business districts and public service.

Henning said he will consider the campaign successful if it reaches $650,000. He bases this on the fact that 1970 has been an off-year. Unemployment is up, jobs are almost non-existent, people are budget-conscious.

Victoria is not alone with a limping United Appeal campaign. Vancouver, with two weeks to go, has raised 71.2 per cent of its goal. Appeal staff is asking for an additional $1.24 million in Vancouver.

Calgary and Winnipeg are lagging, though Edmonton has topped 100 per cent and Toronto appears likely to do the same.

If Big Business Doesn't Come Up With Its Share He Faces a Hard Choice

Henning says he is optimistic, and he backs it up with these observations:

More than 170 contacts remain to be made in the large corporations division.

And 41 companies increased their donations this year. These donations, as do all corporate figures, include personal and company totals.

He also says that more money will arrive from the federal service employees, area teachers, provincial civil servants and individual donors.

If these areas contribute at least $50,000 more, and the large and small corporations another $100,000, the Appeal will be over the $630,000 mark.

But with this figure, the Appeal still faces a $70,000 shortfall.

The contingency fund is not much over $10,000. This means that any substantial shortfall leaves two options.

The Community Chest can start the unprecedented process of cutting agency grants. Or it can dip into the legacy reserve for the first time.

The legacy reserve is nearly $300,000, but some of this money has been willed to the Chest under certain provisions. Interest from this fund traditionally has been transferred to the contingency fund, Henning said.

And he said some members of the Chest believe that the legacy fund should be used for special projects, not to meet shortfalls. His personal feeling is that legacy fund money should be used to keep each agency's grant at its projected amount.

But this decision would have to be made by the Community Chest.

Henning's speculative observations aside, most of the remaining money will come from, as did most of that raised to date, individual donors.

Appeal staff estimate that 80 per cent of the campaign's donations come from individuals.

The residential canvass has been a success, although it has accounted for only 16 per cent of the total goal.

Appeal staff notes that the most successful areas of this year's drive have been working and middle-class citizens. But donations from the wealthier Oak Bay-Victoria district and professionals are down from projected amounts.

WINGS FOLD on this trim yellow "ultra light" plane, built by Gene Stauth and his neighbor, Gordon Amy, the latest home-built to fly out of Victoria International Airport. Plane cost about $6,000, is powered by a 125-hp Lycoming engine, cruises at 110 miles an hour and has a range of about 400 miles. Stauth took it on maiden flight last week. THE ULTRA-LIGHT PLANE-WRIGHTS

They Fly by Night—In Basements

By DON VIPOND

Each evening around Victoria there are about a dozen people who drop knife and fork after supper and hustle off to basement, garage or workshop and a special hobby.

In the age of the Saturn 5 they are kinfolk to the Wright brothers. They are building their own airplanes.

Dick Thuillier is a fire-fighter with the department of national defence at Belmont Park. Awhile back he was chatting with a government inspector about the "home-builts" (don't call them that) or "ultra lights" (that's better).

Just how many people are building planes around here? Dick asked in passing. From 200 to 300 between Victoria and Vancouver, replied the inspector, whose job it is to see they meet government specifications.

That shook Dick, who is working on his own two-seater amphibian ultra light, and set him to thinking. Why don't these people get together, maybe share their experience and save some of their numbers a lot of grief?

So he stuck an ad in the paper inviting those interested to contact him. And last week the Victoria Ultra Light Aircraft Association held its first meeting at the Victoria Flying Club, hard by the Pat Bay airport.

Of the 20 or so people there about eight have planes under construction and another three or four are ready to start.

"I'm not really trying to encourage people to build these," Thuillier explained later. "I want them to know what they're getting into."

Dick knows. And it hasn't discouraged him a bit. But it's estimated that of all those who start, only about 10 per cent finish the job and ride their hobbies into the sky.

What does it take to build your own plane?

In general terms, about three years of your spare time, $3,000 to $4,000 for the simpler models (you can spend up to $8,000)—and perseverance, a willingness to pay attention to details.

Dick says anyone capable of doing a good job on a boat could build a plane. But you also need a certain amount of theory of flight and it helps if you passed geometry.

People who might scoff at do-it-yourself planes are reminded that's where it all began — in the Wright brothers' bicycle shop. Since then their history has gone full circle.

First came government regulations on aircraft construction in the 'twenties, when planes went commercial and when too many people began killing themselves in their own creations. The last home-builts of the pioneer era flew (or otherwise) in the early 'thirties.

From then until about 1960, nothing. Since then things have really started to roll.

The Americans led the way and a number of aeronautical engineers produced designs for fun and profit. There are now over 100 designs to choose from. Plans will cost you roughly $50 to $100.

The department of transport, which rules on such matters in Canada, established the ultra light category of aircraft, the only classification for the home-builder.

Among the rules: no more than room for two. And you have to do at least 50 per cent of the construction yourself (a step to prevent blossoming of basement airplane plants).

A DOT inspector makes at least three inspections during construction and if you deviate from accepted plans, you'd better be able to prove your case. (You don't have to work from an accepted design but then you'd have to prove everything will work).

Thuillier notes that not everyone who builds a plane is a pilot. There appears to be two groups: the craftsmen, fascinated by the building challenge, and the pilots who are such "flying nuts" their interest spills beyond flying to building. They need to be craftsmen, too.

Gene Stauth is a bus driver in Victoria who last week took his ultra light on its maiden flight. He and his neighbor, Gordon Amy, spent their spare time in the last three years building the handsome little yellow Stits Playmate.

Stauth's plane is the fourth ultra light to take to Victoria skies in recent years. There are about 30 flying out of Vancouver.

The Victoria Ultra Light Aircraft Association will meet at the Victoria Flying Club hangar the first Wednesday of each month.

Ask the Times

Q. Can you give me an address to which I could write to get some information on cyclamates?—B.J.B.

A. The federal food and drug directorate is probably your best source for informed information. The director-general is R. A. Chapman. The regional director for this area is E. L. Devlin. His address is 1001 West Pender Street, Vancouver.

Q. In old books an f is often found in place of an s, e.g. It fhall be done. When did this practice cease?—G.W.

A. During the 18th century the Gothic or "black-letter" type used by early printers was replaced with Roman characters and the long s (that appeared as an f) gave way to the ordinary s.

Teacher Salaries Hinge on Meet

Agreement on teacher salaries for 1971 in the Greater Victoria school district hinged on a final meeting today between negotiators for the teachers and the school board.

Don Johannessen, representing teachers, said negotiators met until 1 a.m. today in an attempt to meet the provincial contract deadline of midnight Friday.

He said how close the two sides are to an agreement "depends on where you stand."

"I would hope we don't have to go to arbitration."

Sixty-six of the province's 77 school districts have completed contract talks.

Officials of the B.C. Teachers' Federation said it is the best record for pre-arbitration settlements in many years.

Last year there were only 12 pre-arbitration settlements, and 53 districts went to arbitration.

The 1971 settlements have averaged a 1.9 per cent increase in salaries, said Jurd Kirby, the BCTF's assistant director for economic welfare.

Sisters Firm on No Sale

A decision by the Sisters of St. Ann not to sell their land alongside St. Joseph's Hospital is a firm one, the order's provincial superior said today.

"It's closed definitely for now," said Sister Kathleen Moroney of the land sale issue. But she repeated that if at some time in the future, part or all of the land is needed for hospital expansion, the Sisters will be ready to negotiate.

Sister Moroney had been asked to comment on statements from Health Minister Ralph Loffmark Friday which suggested he thinks the Sisters' announcement Thursday that the land sale is off is something less than definite.

Loffmark said in Vancouver Friday he was disappointed to hear there was "some hesitation" on the part of the Sisters to sell the 7.1 acres.

PATIENCE URGED

Patience and understanding must be exercised and a few days should be allowed "to let the matter settle," he said.

The Sisters said Thursday they had never wanted to sell the land but had been advised by experts it was vital to the hospital's future. Now experts were advising it wasn't so the sale is off.

TOO BIG

The Order is dedicated to hospital care and to teaching, and withdrawal of the land offer means the Sisters will be able to carry on their high school, located on the property to have been sold.

The Sisters are still willing to give to the community their $3 million plus equity in the hospital they founded 93 years ago. In recent years they have decided the hospital has grown too big for them to be responsible for.

Development plans at St. Joseph's have been plagued for over a year by arguments among the society designated to take over the hospital, the region's hospital board, the city and the provincial government.

Davis 'Did Duty' On Fish Order

David Anderson, MP for Esquimalt-Saanich, says there is no reason why Mayor Courtney Haddock should be upset by Federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis' order to provide water for the salmon in Goldstream.

"He (Davis) must enforce the law, as he has done in other parts of Canada," he said. "He was doing his duty. If he had not taken action, I would have been the first person to be critical of the minister."

Haddock, who is chairman of the Greater Victoria Water Board, accused Davis of "childish political ploy" and of "trying to get in on the act" as a means of attracting attention.

(Davis in a letter to the mayor threatened to enforce the fisheries act if the board did not act to save the fish all year round.)

Action to save the salmon, the mayor said, was taken without help or threats from Davis.

Said Anderson: "The minister was not trying to get in on the act as he was being well informed of the Goldstream situation by federal fisheries officers in Victoria and Vancouver."

Moonlighting Favored By Armed Forces Head

The man who heads Canada's West Coast forces, Rear-Admiral Richard Leir, says he favors moonlighting by forces personnel — holding down outside jobs that don't interfere with military duties.

Leir said today a "great number" of the 3,000 men and women in uniform at the Victoria maritime base do outside work, particularly young married persons with heavy financial responsibilities.

"It creates some friction, because the man at sea can't get outside income, and he tends to resent the ability to do so in the case of land personnel.

"But forces personnel are citizens like everyone else, and if they want to earn extra income it's just fine. They know the rules, and they don't let outside work impinge on their duties."

HANG-DOG LEADERS

(Gerald Mulholland, 37, a CFB Esquimalt seaman and part-time taxi driver, was slain Tuesday while driving taxi. Three men, two of them CFB Esquimalt personnel, were charged today with non-capital murder in the slaying.)

Leir, who assumed command of coast forces June 9, does not intend to mince words on things considering him — military or otherwise.

Queried on his recent call for strong public support for law enforcement agencies, he explained:

TRULY CANADIAN

"I belong to a society like everyone else. I'm a Canadian. I represent the new look in the armed forces. A new service has been created and you can't expect the old kind of leaders who sat back with hang-dog faces."

A strong advocate of unification, Leir says that prior to its implimentation, all three services patterned their traditions on those of other countries.

Those traditions had to be destroyed to build a truly Canadian force, he said.

"No other armed force in the west has been faced with this. No one has taken their armed forces, completely disintegrated them and then set about building a new look."

His most important — and challenging — task, says Leir is to "build up the tone" of the men under him, by tackling the problem of drugs, drinking and dress.

"We have more drug problems than any of the five commands in Canada. This is probably because we're located nearer the source of supply, the Orient.

"I intend to make no compromise on drugs. Users will be dealt with in the due process of our law. Each case will be reviewed by Ottawa. I cannot risk other men or expensive equipment."

Drinking, says the admiral, is becoming an increasing problem among the young.

"This has been brought under my microscope. The rules have been a little too liberal."

Leir is determined that his men will have pride in their uniform.

"If a man has only one cap issued to him and it's scuffy, he can get another. If he doesn't he can always join another club, or the 10 per cent unemployed on the street."

Leir's get-tough attitude is in direct contrast to that of Admiral Elmo Zumwalt, chief of U.S. naval operations, who announced this week he would allow liquor in barracks, long hair, hard rock music clubs and an end to "Mickey Mouse" clothing regulations for sailors.

Arthur Mayse . . .

AT INTERVALS through the years, I have croaked warnings about what was likely to overtake Canada's book publishing industry if it didn't pull up its quaintly-patterned socks.

My thesis is and has been that the publisher who hopes to keep his nose above water in a competitive world can't afford to inhabit a self-created vacuum. He must find, encourage and develop good writers. It isn't enough to make his chief function the rather timid jobbing of another country's books.

But now that the worst has begun to happen, I take no pleasure in seeing my fears come to roost. After all, it's important that a country overshadowed by a giant neighbor should have a healthy book-publishing business well-rooted in its native soil.

At the same time, those who would have the Canadian taxpayer rescue Toronto's venerable Ryerson Press from the Yankee octopus should be aware of one uncomfortable probability.

Ryerson, a house gone over the hill, might be considerably embarrassed by rescue from a reported $2,000,000 deal with a Canada-based American offshoot. If saved from that not altogether unhappy fate, Ryerson might be expected to shape up; and I'm by no means sure that it could do so.

At this point, let us call on a Canadian bookseller in his den. He too would like nothing better than to offer the output of a flourishing Canadian book-publishing industry.

First-off, he named an indigenous house which he feels is doing a very good job. This is McClelland and Stewart, publishers who encourage talent, vigorously promote their authors' books, and keep a sharp eye on the Canadian scene.

Significantly, Canada's two most successful book-writers—Pierre Berton and Farley Mowat—are in the McClelland and Stewart stable.

The bookseller then gave honorable mention to a couple of hard-trying Westerners (Hurtig in Edmonton, and Gray's Publishing Ltd. of Sidney).

From there on, the going grew tougher.

Doubleday? Some good books to its credit, and an interest in the Canadian writer. But the child of an American parent firm.

Macmilians in Canada? Long service rendered, but kissing cousin to Viking in the United States and Macmillans in England.

When I mentioned Ryerson Press, his juices turned sour.

Here, he suggested, was a firm that had got itself in a mess. It had lost authors, in large part through failure to promote their work. It did not function efficiently, its Christmas book-list failed utterly to turn him on, and its future under its own steam looked nothing less than bleak.

"Admittedly, it was a pity that Canada's oldest book-publishing house should find itself in need of bailing out. But as he saw it, that was not a task to be loaded on the residents of Ontario or any other province through government subsidy.

As a man who sells books for a living, his viewpoint on book publishing in Canada at large was less than flattering to the trade.

"The main problem with Canadian publishers," he said, "is the stuff they handle. And too much gets passed over that has a terrific potential."

The Canadian writer didn't escape entirely unscathed. Waiting for him is a reading audience that has proved itself receptive when his work is good. When it isn't, he needn't expect a spirit of nationalism to warm Canadians into laying out for his book.

All this does nothing to brighten a literary picture that could use a little sunshine. Neither does it answer the related problem of providing sufficient Canadian-written textbooks of acceptable quality to fill the curricula lists of our schools.

Perhaps answers will be forthcoming when Canadian book publishers in general trade their notorious timidity for the courage, initiative, and willingness to gamble that successful publishing demands.

If they don't, I'm afraid that their American opposite numbers, who to their credit display those qualities, will gobble 'em up.

A Galanos white crepe evening dress is girded in smocking, slit to above the knee.

Pay 5c more and get two! . . .

We simply didn't believe it when we first heard the news . . . Wilson's having a 5c sale? Preposterous! . . . Well, it seems that anything can happen in this day and age! . . . Don't imagine though that you're going to be able to walk in and buy two $200 suits for the price of one . . . Sale is strictly in the children's department . . . on those charming St. Michael's summer dresses for little girls, and shirt and pant sets for small boys . . . Buy one at the regular price, and for a nickel more, you can choose any other selling at the same price, regardless of style or size! . . . Reason for all of this is that Wilson's are overstocked on these adorable English dresses and suits . . . (We suspect their buyer got carried away by so many delightful colors and styles when it came time to sign the order!) . . . Anyway, it's a heaven-sent opportunity for you doting grandmas, fond aunts, and practical mothers to buy quality colthes for your favorite children . . . at simply unheard of savings, and just in time for Christmas giving! . . . We won't attempt to describe all these St. Michael's things . . . but take our word for it, they're honeys! All washables and mostly drip-dries . . . beautifully made and cute as all getout . . . in sizes from infants in arms to about age 12 . . . Hurry down to Wilson's first thing Monday! . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Those on the boot route can go to any length — from ankle high pant boots to over-the-knee boots. The latter will fill in the less gap, regardless of whether it's midi or mini.

Every woman loves pretty nighties . . .

Whether you buy your own nighties . . . or are thinking of giving one as a Christmas gift . . . or even just hoping to find one under the tree on Christmas morn . . . (now's the time for subtle hints to husbands or what have you!) . . . do go see the lovely new nighties just arrived at Impacts 'n Imports! . . . The trend, you'll find, is back towards long gowns . . . and aren't they graceful and feminine? . . . For women who don't like double-layered gowns, there's a delightful accordion pleated polyester crepe nightdress in pale blue, with lace top threaded through with rows of narrow blue ribbon . . . $35 . . . If you DO like filmy double layers, there's a graceful Claire Haddad gown in eggshell nylon tricot . . . very plain, with high neck tying at the back with bow . . . $20 . . . Or if you prefer a bit of sleeve, there's a pale pink gown with cap sleeves, embroidered trim and little covered buttons in front so you can slip it over your head without wrecking your hairdo . . . And an eggshell long-sleeved nightie with lace at neck, wrists and around the bottom . . . $18 . . . Another long-sleeved beauty is pink brushed nylon with wide lace around the sleeves and hem . . . pretty as a picture, and so cozy to wear . . . Many other new gowns to choose from, too, at . . . Impacts 'n' Imports, 8 Centennial Square, 388-7023.

What the shoe supports this season is more than a foot. It takes over where the hemline leaves off.

Miss Frith's lucky ladies . . .

While we firmly believe that every lady who shops at Miss Frith's is lucky . . . because she rarely has to go elsewhere to find exactly what she's looking for . . . Miss Frith's are handing out an extra bit of luck in the shape of prizes this month . . . $100, $50 and $25 merchandise certificates to be drawn for on Dec. 1 . . . and all you need do is deposit a slip with your name, address and telephone number . . . However if you happen to have purchased something when you put your slip in . . . and you're a winner . . . they'll give you back the full purchase price! . . . So be sure to drop in! . . . We told you not long ago about how Miss Frith's stress femininity in their fashions . . . but this doesn't mean they don't sell pantsuits . . . Just the contrary! They've got the most absolutely fabulous collection of pantsuits we've ever laid eyes on . . . and every last one of them is fashioned to make you look every inch a woman! . . . So if you like pants, and feel you can wear them . . . do go try some on at Miss Frith's . . . There's a tremendous selection of evening pantsuits and jumpsuits in lovely fabrics of all kinds . . . surprisingly reasonable in price, we thought . . . Smart pantsuits for street wear . . . Separates shown in combination . . . or choose your own . . . Advantage of these is that you can have different sizes in pants and tops, if necessary . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1617 Douglas St., 383-7181.

Stunning new knits at Eaton's . . .

Any woman who reads Vogue and Harper's and the New Yorker doesn't need to be told about Kimberley knits . . . they're outstanding in the world of knit fashions . . . and here in Victoria they're exclusive to the Import Room at Eaton's . . . We saw several new ones which arrived at Eaton's just the other day . . . a couple of classics . . . one leaf green, the other brown and black . . . A perfectly stunning outfit in royal purple with the new short "battle" jacket . . . lilac top sleeveless dress, buttoning down the front to above the knee . . . leaving a provocative opening to give oomph to the midi skirt . . . wide leather belt cinching the waist . . . Another high fashion Kimberley is Sienna brown with black scoop-necked top, side buttoned skirt and short collared jacket . . . There's a 3-piece dacron textured knit printed in pink, coral, taupe and orange . . . hand-washable, and eminently packable if you're off on a trip . . . from Florence . . . a black trevira ribbed knit in shirtwaist style, with long sleeves and tie belt . . . Another smart merino wool printed with a very attractive design . . . moss and tangerine in a beige ground . . . pure silk scarf with the identical design . . . Eaton's Import Room, 382-7141, Local 242.

Fun aids to learning . . .

Just in time for Young Canada Book week . . . which starts this weekend . . . the Book Nook has received some completely new . . . and utterly marvellous . . . children's books which could be aptly described as "fun aids to learning" . . . To say we were entranced with them is putting it mildly . . . and we think any one of them would make a simply perfect Christmas gift for any boy or girl . . . Three are pop-up books . . . "Your Body—Bones and Muscles" . . . which shows all the parts of the body and how they work . . . with moveable bones, etc. . . . and at the end, a pocket containing a question wheel, with answers . . . The other . . . exciting and very timely . . . is "Water" . . . also containing pop-ups and moveable parts to show children where water comes from and where it goes . . . question wheel with this too . . . The third is "Aladdin and his Wonderful Lamp" . . . enough to make any child gasp with delight! . . . "Something to Do", 300 games, hobbies and pastimes is a boon to every child (and adult who has a child underfoot on wet days . . . demanding "What can I do?") . . . For the young fry, there's a delightful new Babar book . . . "Babar's Birthday Surprise" . . . In case you didn't know . . . Babor is a loveable elephant and this is his latest adventure . . . Even you grown-ups will enjoy it! . . . Book Nook, 10 Centennial Square, 386-0813.

Beautiful furniture at tremendous savings! . . .

To our personal knowledge, a lot of Victoria homes are more attractive today . . . as a result of their owners having acquired one or more choice pieces of furniture at Home Furniture's closing out sale! . . . No double about it, things are disappearing fast . . . But we also know that there's still lots of the best merchandise left . . . marked down from prices which . . . even BEFORE the sale . . . were low for such fine quality imported furniture! . . . This week we noticed a magnificent library bookcase in Home's window . . . a mahogany antique reproduction from England . . . reduced from $1195 to $875 . . . and were told that it's retail value today is considerably higher than even the original price tag indicated . . . You'd need a big room for this, though, because it's 80" long . . . There are many other such items left at Home . . . like the two large . . . and very beautiful . . . carved oak Windsor sideboards . . . one with glazed doors, and the other with carved panels . . . Originally $975 . . . now $825 . . . A couple of lovely oak secretaire desks are marked down to $185 . . . And there are several tremendous little home bars in hand—carved oak . . . stools to match . . . to be had at quite spectacular savings! . . . If you'd like something new and lovely for your home this Christmas . . . don't on any account miss this extraordinary sale at . . . Home Furniture Company, 825 Fort Street, 382-5138.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Day-time dieter eats at night

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I recently married a wonderful man. He had been married to a woman who was sickly for many years. She finally took her own life, leaving him with one child who could be a beauty if she ever got down to human proportions. Abby, she is enormous. I don't know how much she actually weighs because she refuses to get on a scale, but she must be 250 pounds, and she's only five feet tall!

This child has been on every kind of diet imaginable, but she "cheats." We discovered that after dieting all day, she'd get up at night and raid the refrigerator and pantry, so we put locks on both.

Now, she steals food during the daytime and hides it in her room to eat at night. I've found candy, cookies, bologna and even cans of spaghetti hidden under her mattress.

Abby, she's not a dull child, but she's so unattractive and unpopular and unhappy. And she's only 13.

Don't suggest TOPS or Weight Watchers, She's tried them. And don't tell me to get her to a doctor. I'd have to drag her there. I want more than anything in the world to help this girl, but where do I start? — Desperate.

DEAR DESPERATE: You must convince her without increasing her shame and guilt that she must see a physician for a thorough physical checkup. She may have a glandular disorder or a sluggish thyroid. The physician will probably recommend psychotherapy. She is a troubled child whose compulsive eating is only a symptom of deeper emotional problems.

DEAR ABBY: I moved into this apartment building 30 years ago. On my floor was a terminal cancer patient who had a nine-year-old cat named "Miss Chee Chee.' I told her I would care for her cat after she was gone and not to worry. She left her entire "estate" to me to care for Miss Chee Chee. (It was $25).

Well, for four days after the lady died, Miss Chee Chee wouldn't eat a thing. I feared she would do, so I called a vet to find out how to get her to eat. On the fifth day, when I had dinner on my table, my phone rang. It was my vet with more "tricks" on how to get the cat to eat. When I got back to he table, my steak, gravy, potatoes and green beans had disappeared!

Fifteen years later Miss Chee Chee put her paws around my neck, gave it a hug and died.

I vote with you. Why destroy a healthy pet? Let God decide. Miss Chee Chee gave me 15 years of happiness, and she had the same herself. — George Thanos, N.Y.C.

DEAR ABBY: I think I can help TIRED cure her overly amorous husband. Every time he gets lovey-dovey, go right along with his suggestion and ask for more. Before long, he will not get so lovey-dovey so often. At least, that's the way I cured my husband. — San Franciscan.

DEAR ABBY: I know exactly what TIRED is trying to say because I have the same kind of husband. If I just look in his direction he takes it as an invitation for an immediate flop on the nearest flat surface. But before you condemn me for my "cold fish" attitude, please read this through:

For years I have tried, without success, to teach my husband to be a little more considerate, subtle, tender and patient. I would like him to kiss me, caress me, and make me feel that he wants to please me, rather than use me for his own pleasure. His crude approach leaves me cold.

I am bursting with affection. I kiss the kids, the dog, and the cat. I even kiss the marakeet. But not my husband, because he doesn't give me a chance. — Frustrated In San Jose.

DEAR ABBY: Please give TIRED a message for me: Women make a big mistake when they allow themselves to be trapped by routine. If you love him and he loves you, what's the matter with showing a little honest emotion at six o'clock and having a romantic candlelight dinner at eight, or nine?

My first wife had to have everything just so. First she'd put her hair up. Then she'd take off her makeup. Then she'd suds her undies. Then she'd check the doors and windows. The she'd get into bed and read the newspapers! And by the time she was ready, I was sound asleep. — Jimmy.

What's your problem? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. Write to ABBY, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply enclose stamped, addressed envelope.

Women will influence collective bargaining

CHICAGO (UPI) — In the next decade women will form the largest increase in the labor force and will help turn collective bargaining more to "social and public interest," a business school dean predicts.

Seymour L. Wolfbein, dean of the School of Business Administration at Temple University in Philadelphia, said in the coming 10 years he thinks one of seven new workers in the United States will be black, and the average white collar professional will have 17 years of schooling.

"You can imagine what is going to happen when these forces come together in the 1970s," Wolfbein said.

"Collective bargaining will involve itself more and more with social and public interests, as well as the economic side of wages, hours, working conditions and fring benefits," Wolfbein said at a conference on industrial relations held at the University of Chicago.

Victoria housewives escape living rooms to join Register

By ANN DUNSMUIR

"Any woman who has spent 20 years at housework and emerged with her mind intact has really accomplished something.

"Let's face it. We never get a chance to say anything interesting at home.

"Our neighbors save our sanity during the day. I need something to save my sanity evenings while my husband watches TV."

The speakers are all members of the newly formed Victoria Branch of the Canadian Housewife's Register which held its first meeting Thursday evening.

The group of about 20 young women (average age about 26) met at Jubilee Hall in Esquimalt to found the register and decide on procedures.

There will be no formal meetings and no elected officers but the group agrees that some casual form of organization was ncessary or chaos would result.

It was proposed that they break up into three or four smaller groups, each meeting once or twice a month in members' homes with a meeting of the entire register every six to eight weeks for an outing or lecture.

This proposal was voted down almost unanimously. "I see enough of living rooms," said one young woman. "I want to get out of the house in the evening for a change and meet people."

They have decided to meet in the larger group for the time being, and plan to have speakers and discussion groups. The next meeting in two weeks will feature a class in Yoga led by three of the members.

Housewives who get their biggest kicks watching the clothes go round in the dryer are urged to attend.

"We should drag to meetings some of the young women who are so bogged down in housework they never go anywhere. They'll never think of coming on their own," said one crusading member.

If subsequent meetings are anything like the first the advice is excellent.

A series of natural disasters broke the ice—the percolater wouldn't perc, the lights went out, what seemed like hundreds of 12-year-old boys milled about in gym shorts and peered in windows.

Even the stiffest and shyest personalities had to warm up in the general good-natured mood of "what else can happen."

Linda Arnold, the group's vivacious organizer, probably planned it all.

Order open to women

LONDON (AP) — One of Britain's oldest orders of chivalry, the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, has been opened to women.

The decision by the Queen means that in the future distinguished women will have the right to the order —the country's third most exclusive one.

Until now, the order, founded in 1399, has been reserved for men — usually generals, admirals or high-ranking civil servants.

Women so honored will be variously known as Dame Grand Cross, Dame Commander or Companion of the Order, Buckingham Palace said.

Girl Guides plan reunion

A reunion for Girl Guides who attended either the old Victoria West Hall or the Esquimalt Salvation Army Hall under the direction of Jean Reading is planned for next Friday.

The reunion will be held from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the Victoria SA Citadel, 725 Pandora Avenue.

Discrimination by any other name . . .

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a coalition of women's groups scorning the latest advances of a fickle U.S. Senate, the struggle for greater constitutional guarantees against sex discrimination apparently has fizzled in its most promising year.

Leaders of women's rights organizations said Thursday they would rather leave things the way they are than settle for Senator Birch Bayh's substitute for the no-holds-barred amendment approved by the House of Representatives weeks ago.

After the women's news conference, a spokesman for the Indiana Democrat said their failure to support Bayh's last-minute plan to rescue some semblance of the amendment meant: "As far as we're concerned, it's dead."

The Bayh substitute is the first order of business for a returning Senate next week, but it apparently will be removed from the calendar without protest.

The original version of the amendment reads simply that "equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state on account of sex."

WOULD EXTEND CLAUSE

Bayh's proposal calls instead for extending the 14th Amendment's equal-protection clause to sex-discrimination cases, but also would "recognize the need for a flexible standard in cases where different treatment under the law may be justified."

Women's groups object the added language would prove an excuse to continue discriminatory practices, particularly in employment.

The original version was introduced 47 years ago. It did not reach the full House until this summer, when Representative Martha Griffiths (Dem.—Mich.) won support of two-thirds of her colleagues to force the judiciary committee to discharge the proposed amendment for the victorious House vote.

But when the members of the Senate suddenly were faced with the prospect of actually voting for a measure they professed to sponsor, the tide began receding.

Sixty candles light Colwood WI cake

Memories of garden parties at Hatley Park loaned for the event by Mrs. James Dunsmuir, a former member, will be revived when The Colwood Women's Institute celebrates its diamond anniversary.

Guests from the 18 Women's Institutes of the South Vancouver Island District will attend a special tea to make the occasion Wednesday from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Colwood Hall.

The group was first organized in October 1910 and the branch received its charter on November 18 1910.

Lillian M. Savory is the only remaining charter member. Miss Savory won't reveal her age, but Mrs. Mary Murray, a member since 1918, will be 93 in December. Another active long-term member, Margaret Hopwood, joined in 1927.

Mrs. Murray's daughter, Mrs. Bert Parker, has been branch secretary since 1930 and has missed only one meeting. Her daughter, Mrs. Fred Acres, is carrying on the family tradition. She is vice-president of the institute.

Mrs. E. H. Emery, who served as president for a nine-year period, has once again been elected to that office.

In 1911 Mrs. James Dunsmuir suggested that the institute help to establish a church in Colwood. Members of the institute led by Mrs. Peatt assisted in the fund drive that resulted in the building of St. John's Church.

A resolution put forward by the Colwood Branch in 1928 suggesting a day be set aside each year to honor the founder of women's instutites, Adelaide Hoodless, was adopted nationally.

Liberals to Win, Say 47% of Voters

By THE CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC OPINION
(World Copyright Reserved)

Most Canadian voters (47 per cent) predict that the Liberals will win again in the next federal election, while 17 per cent think that Conservatives will return to power and 5 per cent the NDP.

This expectation of another victory for Mr. Trudeau is at its highest level among men and women with university training (69 per cent). Men are more inclined to believe it (52 per cent) than are women (42 per cent) as more women are uncertain about what will happen. French and English voters take much the same point of view, with about half the voters in each segment anticipating a Liberal win. Younger Canadians (55 per cent) agree, compared to 45 per cent of those who are over 50.

Just prior to Mr. Trudeau's victory in June, 1968, a larger segment of the voters (59 per cent) expected a Liberal win, compared to 19 per cent who thought the Conservatives would do so—a figure close to current attitudes. Today, with an election considered likely in two years, 29 per cent are undecided, compared to a 20 per cent level just before the last election.

The question:

"Putting your own politics on one side, which party do you think will win the next federal election, expected some time in 1972?"

Soviets Join Aviation Association

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union became a member today of the International Civil Aviation Organization, one of the strongest advocates of co-ordinated worldwide sanctions against airline hijacking.

The Soviets applied for ICAO membership Oct. 14, the day before a Soviet plane was hijacked to Turkey by a man of Lithuanian descent and his son. A stewardess was killed in the incident.

The Montreal-based ICAO, which includes most countries that operate major airlines, sets standards for international carriers.

PARSON PEDDLES MARGARINE ON TV

LONDON (AP) — A country parson is going on British television with a commercial for God and margarine.

Rev. Ronald Stephens, Anglican vicar of the Hertfordshire parish of Stanstead Abbots, normally preaches to a congregation of around 20. His audience Friday for a 45-second plug for Blue Band margarine may run into millions.

Stephens said he took the job only on condition he could write his own script. He starts by saying he is not really a margarine man because it reminds him of his years in the army.

Then he adds: "However, we ate it. Our system probably needed it. The body needs fat like the soul needs God."

The commercial was filmed in his study.

"I had always been averse to margarine, for example, but now I really do like it."

The venture has the backing of his bishop, Rt. Rev. John Trillo.

The vicar, father of five children, wasn't talking about his fee, except that it is enough to balance his bank account.

STAMP NEWS

Two New U.S. Issues to Be Released

By ROBERT G. OLIPHANT

Soon the United States will place on sale two 6-cent commemoratives.

The first will observe the silver anniversary of the United Nations, and the second one will record the 350th anniversary of the Mayflower's landing in the New World.

The UN anniversary stamp will come out Nov. 20 in New York City. Featured is the emblem of that peace organization, and a big "UN." Designer: Arnold Copeland. It's horizontal-in-format, and was printed in blue, red and black.

The United Nations' Charter was signed in San Francisco on June 26, 1945, and it came into effect on Oct. 24 of that year. There were 51 original members.

On Nov. 21, the vertical-in-format Mayflower multi-color will be released in Plymouth, Mass. Pictured is the Mayflower in the background, and in the foreground, a cluster of pilgrims. Mark English designed it.

With about 100 persons on board, the Mayflower left Plymouth, England on Sept. 16, 1620. Their destination was Virginia, but adverse weather brought them to what is now Massachusetts.

On Nov. 21, 1620, that small ship anchored in Provincetown Harbor, Mass., and aboard that vessel on the same day, a constitution, the "Mayflower Compact," was signed. A group went ashore there to find a permanent landing place, and it turned out to be Plymouth; the first Pilgrim Fathers stepping ashore there Dec. 21, 1620. The first governor of Plymouth Colony was John Carver (d.1621).

On Nov. 24, the U.S. will issue two 6-cent, "se-tenant" stamps. One will mark the 50th anniversary of an organization called the Disabled American Veterans. The other will pay tribute to American servicemen, especially the prisoners of war, those killed in action, and those whose fate is unknown.

Before the end of 1970, the U.S. will place on sale yet another adhesive. It will salute General Douglas MacArthur (1880-1964).

Two pictorials (6c and 30c) and a 10-cent aerogramme released Nov. 2 by Australia commemorate the 50th anniversary of Qantas Airways.

Malta's three Christmas semi-postals issued Nov. 7 were designed by Chev. E. V. Cremona, and were photogravure-printed by the Government Printer, Israel.

On Oct. 26, the Republic of Ireland (Eire) released two "se-tenant" 9-pence stamps. One honors Thomas MacCurtain (1884-1920), and the other pays tribute to Terence McSwiney (1879-1920). Both were Irish Nationalists who died martyrs.

The third instalment in New Zealand's definitive series came out Nov. 4. These latest adhesives depict fish, namely: a scarlet parrot fish (5c); two sea horses (6c); two leather jackets (7c) a garfish (7½c); and a John Dory (8c).

Botswana issued four pictorials and a souvenir sheet for Christmas Nov. 3.

Oct. 28 was the date on which a handsome Christmas quartet (3c, 10c, 35c and 50c) from Antigua came out. They were originally set to appear Oct. 15.

Canada's Lord Strathcona stamp is quite good looking! Its coloring is pleasing, and the medallion which is featured has a striking three-dimensional appearance. However, the printing below it is much too small, and his name should have been given not as "Sir Donald Alexander Smith," but as "Lord Strathcona."

At 8 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 20, the next meeting of the Greater Victoria Philatelic Society will start. It will be held at the Inn, 1528 Cook Street.

Soviet Poet to Visit

OTTAWA (CP) — Soviet poet Andrei Voznesensky has been forced to postpone for one week a planned three-week visit to Canada which was to have begun next Monday.

Voznesensky advised the Canadian embassy in Moscow Thursday that he was unable to leave the Soviet capital Nov. 15 as scheduled but expected to leave a week later.

No reason was given for the postponement.

The external affairs department said it is hoped that Voznesensky, 37, would still be able to give readings from his works at all the Canadian universities where he had planned to appear, among them the University of Alberta at Edmonton and University of British Columbia.

SIGNS POINT TO RUST

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — When rust appeared on the body of his new car after only a year, an unidentified motorist here staged a silent protest demonstration.

He left the car in a parking lot facing the busiest intersection in the city, and flanked it with signs pointing to each spot of rust. The car drew a lunch hour crowd.

Large signs pointed to large rust spots, small signs to small spots, and on the roof, stood a large yellow sign cut in the shape of a lemon.

Floods Kill 100

BOGOTA (AP) — The Magdelena River burst from its banks in northern El Cesar state, washing away villages and leaving more than 100 persons dead in 48 hours, the government reported Wednesday night.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Skies were generally cloudy across B.C. overnight. There was occasional rain at times mixed with snow over the central Interior as the remnants of Friday's Pacific cold front crossed the province. A deepening low-pressure centre 600 miles west of the northern California coast will lie just off northern Vancouver Island on Sunday maintaining a flow of fairly mild Pacific air over the province. The associated Pacific cold front will cross Vancouver Island Sunday afternoon accompanied by a few showers.

'GRASS' FARMER REMANDED

DUNCAN — Henry Anthony Ogden, 18, of Lake Cowichan Road pleaded guilty in Duncan court Friday to cultivation of marijuana. He was remanded to Nov. 27 for sentence.

Ogden was arrested Thursday night after police searched his premises.

Bob Eckert, 25, of Duncan was given a three-year suspended sentence after being found guilty of possession of marijuana.

Dancing Banned

JACKSON, Tenn. (Reuter) — The Tennessee Baptist convention has voted to ban dancing on the campuses of church-controlled colleges in the state.

City Lawyer Joins Race For Oak Bay Council

Lawyer John Goult, 40, of 1605 York, announced Friday he will be an aldermanic candidate in Oak Bay's December election.

Married, with four children, Goult says he is opposed to the spread of apartment zoning in the municipality.

"If this trend continues, the quality of life and atmosphere of Oak Bay will be destroyed."

Goult adds that he's concerned about the spot zoning which has taken place. "Spot zoning is vicious."

He also advocates the purchase of Blueberry Hill on Island Road, now owned by the Jones family, to be retained as a park.

Here's a nice little phone number to ease your Christmas shopping problems.

This Christmas we're going to take the hard work out of your gift shopping and put back the fun.

Now, isn't that what you've always wanted?

You'll need two things: (1) your Eaton's Christmas Catalogue, and (2) a telephone.

First, sit back in your favourite armchair with a cup of coffee and start flicking through your Catalogue. 392 colorful pages packed full of exciting gifts for everyone. From dolls and toys and games to sports wear, typewriters, binoculars, cameras, tape recorders, luggage, perfumes, jewelry, clocks, nighties, dresses, pantsuits, coats, boots, and shoes, shavers, sweaters, slacks, ties, gloves, and much, much, more.

Filling your shopping list will be such fun you'll wonder why you ever shopped any other way.

Now, when you've filled your list, lift up the phone and dial Eaton's Buy Line. The operator will take your order and within minutes your gift problems will be solved.

This year you'll find Eaton's Catalogue prices especially attractive and this year, as always, Eaton's quality is second to none.

If you'd like a little less hard work and a little more fun, phone your gift orders into Eaton's Buy Line at your nearest Eaton's Catalogue Sales Office.

Christmas is for people.

Free Fishing For Pensioners

TORONTO (CP) — Male old-age pensioners will no longer be required to buy the $3 Ontario angling licence. Lands and Forests Minister Rene Brunelle told the legislature Friday that 100,000 pensioners who are fishermen still will require a licence but it will be free. All women and juvenile boys already are exempt from the licence.

Study Links Heart Attacks To Economic Recessions

WASHINGTON (WP) — A Yale researcher has found strong statistical evidence linking increases in heart attack deaths to the country's economic recessions.

After studying heart attack deaths and unemployment figures from 1900 to the present, Dr. M. Harvey Brenner concluded:

"Economic downturns are associated with increased mortality from heart disease, and conversely, heart disease mortality decreases during economic upturns."

He blamed the increased heart attack deaths during recessions on the stresses caused by economic uncertainties — unemployment, losses of a second income and decreased overtime.

Brenner, a specialist in public health research and sociology at the Yale University School of Medicine, reported his findings Friday during the American Heart Association's annual convention in Atlantic City.

In a report three years ago, he found that increases in admissions to mental hospitals accompany economic downturns. Now, under a grant from the U.S. department of labor, he is studying the connections between other diseases and the nation's economy.

He said in an interview that he expects to find "very similar relations to many other illnesses"—especially those believed to be related to stress, such as ulcers and asthma.

Brenner's findings are certain to be controversial, especially in light of current economic conditions in the U.S. Last week's bureau of labor statistics figures showed the highest rate of unemployment in the country—5.6 per cent—since January, 1964.

"Some people die during the first year of a downturn," said Brenner. "We'll see an increase in heart attack deaths this year," he predicted.

"Within a period of an American economic downturn lasting two to three years," he continued, "you would see an increase in heart attack deaths of approximately the same per cent as the decrease in employment."

UNLUCKY MILTON SURVIVED 13TH

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI) — Because Milton James Jr. worries so much, he has had ulcers since he was in the fourth grade.

Friday the 13th should have added to his worries.

Milton was 13 years old Friday. He travelled 13 miles to school, put his books in his locker No. 13 and went to his home room — No. 13.

Was he worried?

"No" said his mother, Mrs. Milton E. James. "In fact he went to school this morning feeling like something of a celebrity."

And despite the fact there are 13 letters in his name and it rained, the unlucky day turned into a charm, his mother said.

"Milton feels he is quite lucky because everyone is making such a fuss."

He didn't exactly skip off to school on Friday the 13th, however. Tests in his hardest subjects — English and history — awaited him.

Mrs. James said Milton has had some bad breaks in his 13 years. Some of the seventh grader's hard luck stories include his ulcers, a broken arm, a form of meningitis and bad eyesight.

Mrs. James said the ulcers are the result of her son "trying a little bit too hard to be first. He tries so hard and sometimes this doesn't always work out.

"He's a little bit of a worrier, but he doesn't show it too much."

In his spare time, Milton is a rocket builder and launcher, an avid football fan, model car builder, fisher, swimmer and hunter.

And he didn't expect any trouble on his birthday.

"That is, unless our English teacher calls on me to tell about Friday the 13th, its origins and so on," he said. "I'll be in trouble if she does."

Germs Renounced, But Stockpiled

WASHINGTON — Almost a year ago, President Nixon said that the United States was renouncing germ warfare.

Today, despite the president's proclamation, the United States has authorized as much money for biological research as was appropriated last year.

It has not destroyed the stocks of biological warfare agents—including 45,000 poison bullets and darts—stored at Pine Bluff Arsenal in Arkansas—nor has it dismantled any of the army's biological research facilities at Pine Bluff or at Fort Detrick, Md.

The government still has not done away with the anti-crop biological agents stored at Pine Bluff and elsewhere, that produce such diseases as wheat rust and rice blast.

Additionally, the Geneva Protocol of 1925, which bans the first use in war of chemical and biological agents, has not yet been approved.

Nine months passed before the administration sent the treaty to the Senate for ratification. According to government sources, it took that long because the White House was undecided how to tell the Senate that it did not consider tear gas and herbicides—which the United States has used in great quantities in Vietnam—to be covered by the treaty.

Last December, the United Nations General Assembly asserted, by a vote of 80 to 3, that the protocol did ban tear gas and herbicides.

The White House finally decided to send the treaty to the Senate foreign relations committee with no explicit reservations attached. Nevertheless, when witnesses from the state department and the Pentagon come to the committee to testify, they may be asked some difficult questions.

In any case, the committee doubts that it will manage to hear all the executive branch's witnesses this year; it may not even start the hearings on the protocol until January.

Advocates of ratification argue that while germ warfare is a marginal area in terms of national policy, the issue provides an index to the seriousness of the administration's intentions.

Last Nov. 25 the president announced that the United States would not use any biological weapons, even to retaliate against an enemy attack, and he ordered existing American germ weapons destroyed. He also pledged that research on biological agents would be only defensive in nature.

While specific information on biological agents is secret, government visitors to Pine Bluff Arsenal report the existence of a 10-storey tower where biological agents were produced and 273 mounts, or igloos, visible from the air where the germs or toxins—toxins are the dead but poisonous products of bacteria—are kept under refrigeration.

According to reliable sources, four types of agents are stockpiled at Pine Bluff. These agents produce tularemia, Q-fever, anthrax and Venezuelan equine encephalitis.

Some government officials attribute the delay in destroying these stocks to the lethargy of the bureaucracy; others maintain that the White House has failed to take vigorouns action to make sure it decision is carried out.

Whitbread — McGowan

A double ring ceremony was solemnized on June 20th, 1970, in St. John's Anglican Church, when Robyn Elizabeth, younger daughter of Group Captain and Mrs. E. A. McGowan of 1880 Beach Drive, Victoria, became the bride of Ian David Whitbread, eldest son of Dr. and Mrs. J. L. M. Whitbread, 3030 Devon Road, Victoria. Canon Grahame Baker officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the dark-haired bride was radiant in a floor-length gown designed and made by the bride. She also designed and made the gowns of her attendants. The bride's engagement and wedding rings were designed and made by the groom. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Peta-Ann Jackson, Mrs. Robert Pettit, nieces Kerry-Lee and Tammy-Lou Jackson, and Miss Jill Gore, niece of the groom, was a charming little flower girl. Mr. Ellis Pryce-Jones was best man. Messrs. Robert Pettit and Jay McGowan, brother of the bride, were ushers.

A reception followed on the Terrace at Royal Roads Military College, where Mr. W. H. Forrest proposed the toast to the bride. The three-tiered cake was beautifully decorated by Miss Dee Rogers, a friend of the bride, and was cut with the traditional dress sword belonging to the bride's father. Master of Ceremonies was Flight Lieutenant K. I. McGowan, brother of the bride.

The newlyweds are now residing in Vancouver.

Asgeirsson — Armstrong

A beautiful double ring ceremony took place October 10th, 1970, at 8 o'clock in St. Dunstan's Anglican Church when Reverend W. J. Lunney united in marriage Frances Linda, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Armstrong, 4124 Gordon Head Road, Victoria, and Mr. Robert Jochum Asgeirsson, only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Asgeirsson, Winnipeg, Manitoba. During the signing of the register, Mr. Barry Grimshaw sang "Still as the Night." He was accompanied by Mr. V. Green.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a formal gown in empire fashion, made of crystal peau with Venice lace applique encrusted with pearls at the high neckline. The long sleeves had miniature cuffs with bridal buttons attached. Matching Venetian lace applique encrusted with pearls trimmed the train, which was attached at the shoulders and flowed to the floor. Her hand-made headdress was a Juliet cap of Venetian lace with a below-the-waist bouffant tiered veil of illusion tulle with Swiss embroidered edge. She carried a Colonial bouquet of pink sweetheart roses and white carnations. Matron of honor Mrs. Dorothy Hart wore a gown with a bodice of white georgette and flower applique on the high neckline and long sleeves. The skirt of her gown was purple velvet and she carried a bouquet of pink carnations. The bridesmatron, Mrs. Sigrid Kellas, sister of the groom, and the bridesmaids Miss Eleanor Armstrong, sister of the bride, and Miss Marilyn Smith wore identical floor-length gowns in the Gibson Girl look. They featured winter white crepe tops with burgundy-coloured velvet skirts and wide waist bands of chartreuse satin and matching bow. They carried colonial bouquets of pink carnations. The mother of the bride wore a gold coat-dress of brocade, with a mink jacket, gold and white accessories and a corsage of white gardenias. The mother of the groom chose a dress of beige antron lace with brown accessories and a corsage of white gardenias. Best man was Mr. Bruce Kellas and Messrs. Martin Buck, Gary Hanney and Roy Hayter ushered the guests.

A reception was held in the McPherson Restaurant. Mr. G. F. Sharpe proposed the toast to the bride and music was supplied by George Fairfield and his orchestra.

After the reception the young couple left for a honeymoon on the Gulf Islands. For her going-away outfit, the bride chose a blue virigin wool twill dress with matching coat. Black and white accessories and a corsage of white gardenias completed the ensemble. They are now making their home in Vancouver.

Thompson — Dallimore

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Dallimore, 2586 Cavendish Avenue, Victoria, B.C., are pleased to announce the marriage of their daughter, Judith Louise, to Bruce Hunter Thompson, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Thompson, 972 Winnington Avenue, Ottawa, Ontario. The wedding took place Friday, September 11, 1970, in Ridge Church, Accra Ghana, West Africa.

Both are C.U.S.O. Volunteers in Ghana. Mr. Thompson in Research with The World Health Organization, Bolgatanga. Mrs. Thomtson teaching at Navrongo, where they now reside.

Smith — Anderson

Mr. and Mrs. James W. Anderson, 2149 Kendal Avenue, Victoria, B.C., are pleased to announce the marriage of their daughter, Donna Elizabeth, to Delbert Burton Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross E. Smith, North Pine, B.C.

The wedding took place in Victoria on Friday, November 13, 1970. Miss Cathryn Corbett, Miss Wendy Aaronson, Mr. Austin Cullen and Mr. James Evans acted as attendants. The couple are now residing at 2233 Bowker Avenue, Victoria.

Lindsay — Currie

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Currie, 2411 Trent Street, Victoria, B.C., announce the marriage of their eldest daughter, Heather Anne, to Mr. Paul Lindsay, son of Mrs. Clarissa Lindsay, Christ Church, New Zealand, and Mr. Frank Lindsay, Sumner, New Zealand.

The wedding took place October 3, 1970, at Christ Church, New Zealand, where the couple are now residing.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down down in green pastures:
He leadeth me beside the still waters.
He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.
PSALM 23.

8 CARDS OF THANKS

The husband and family of the late Mrs. J. Amos wish to thank all their friends for the lovely flowers and cards of sympathy in the recent loss of their wife and mother. — Mr. W. S. Amos, 2540 Prior St.

We wish to express to our many friends and neighbors our heartfelt thanks for their expressions of sympathy in the loss of our father and grandfather, Mr. Robert P. Knott.
—Mrs. Margaret Hardy and family.
—Mrs. Kathleen Whittle and family.

9 IN MEMORIAM

DELOUME—In loving remembrance of Adeline J. Deloume, who passed away peacefully Nov. 14, 1964.

As autumn leaves
She faded to sleep;
In memory's garden
My thoughts ever keep.

—Ever remembered by Reg.

JOHNSON — In loving memory of our dear Mother and Grandmother, Maude P. Johnson, who passed away Nov. 15, 1969.

One year has passed since that sad day,
When one we loved was called away;
God took her home — it was His will,
Within our hearts she liveth still.

—Always remembered by Alan, Shirley and children.

Spokesman Hopeful Strike End Near

The spokesman for striking hospital engineers said today he's hopeful the walkout will end Monday.

That's when the B.C. Hospitals Association will consider a proposed settlement hammered out in marathon talks this week and recommended by bargaining teams by both sides.

Members of the International Union of Operating Engineers, the men who operate the steam plants at hospitals, went on strike last Monday after months of contract talks failed to resolve differences over work hours and pay increases.

Royal Jubilee and St. Joseph's Hospitals in Victoria were among the 16 struck by the stationary engineers. But union pickets made sure throughout the strike the hospital operations were not hampered.

Ed Callan, international representative for the union, said its representatives approved Friday the tentative settlement worked out in talks the previous two days.

It only remains for the hospital association to also approve the settlement. The labor relations council of the association meets other association members Monday in Vancouver to consider it.

No details of the proposed settlement were revealed.

There are 137 operating engineers at 28 B.C. hospitals involved in the dispute although the strike was confined to 16 hospitals. Supervisory personnel have been running the steam plants this week.

The only threat to the hospitals' operation has been depleting fuel supplies. Fuel truck drivers would not cross picket lines. The engineers' union agreed Friday to allow a week's supply of fuel oil to be delivered but pickets will remain at least until Monday.

Amnesia Victim Meets Mother

TORONTO (CP) — Rose Ann Hebert had to be told Friday night that the woman who had just walked into her hospital room was her mother.

Then the 15-year-old Saint John, N.B., girl, who has no memory of her life beyond a little more than a week ago, broke into tears.

Her mother, Elizabeth Hebert, had just arrived in Toronto after a 28-hour train trip from Saint John.

Mrs. Hebert, who hadn't seen her daughter for 15 days, spent about 35 minutes in the room.

"She seemed very bright and normal, but she couldn't remember," Mrs. Hebert said of her daughter.

"I mentioned several of her girlfriends back home but the names didn't mean anything."

Doctors say Rose Ann, who hitchhiked to Toronto after "waking up" outside a pool hall in Fredericton, is suffering from amnesia, probably brought on by something she saw or heard that "terrorized" her, doctors say.

DIDN'T KNOW BROTHER

Salvation Army officials here turned the girl over to police who took her to hospital. She was identified after a picture of her on television was seen by her brother Leon, 17, who lives in Orillia. Rose Ann didn't recognize Leon either when he came to the hospital to identify her.

Mrs. Hebert, who reported her daughter missing Nov. 1, said Rose Ann had fallen and hit her head during a track meet last summer and since that time had experienced dizzy spells.

She knew of nothing that might have frightened her daughter, however, Mrs. Hebert said.

A child psychiatrist working with Rose Ann said Friday the publicity surrounding the girl may hinder her recovery.

Dr. Robert Simmons said the girl's amnesia may be a symptom of some anxiety and the sudden rush of attention given her may make her reluctant to give this symptom up even with extensive treatment.

Rose Ann will remain in hospital for at least two weeks and her mother will live with a married sister here.

Mrs. Hebert, mother of eight, borrowed enough money for a one-way train ticket to Toronto. Rose Ann's father, Sylvain, said in Saint John Friday he had accepted an offer from an anonymous benefactor to pay the air fare for Mrs. Hebert's and Rose Ann's trip back to Saint John.

Yippie Revolution Bid Falls Flat

PRESTWICK, Scotland (AP) — American Yippies Jerry Rubin and Stew Albert were put aboard a New York-bound plane today, their bid to revolutionize Britain a flop.

After shouting defiance, they left quickly.

The Americans were flown here from Belfast, Northern Ireland, and escorted by immigration officials to a British Overseas Airways jet for the transatlantic flight.

Rubin and Albert were seized by Belfast police Friday as they left a news conference in a student's back-street apartment.

The two were picked up because they had overstayed their permission to remain in Britain a week. They backed down on a threat to defy British authorities. No deportation order was issued after they agreed to leave of their own accord.

Both gave a clenched-fist salute as they boarded the plane.

So ended the Americans' admitted campaign bid to bring revolution to Britain.

The London Sun said in a front-page editorial: "Good riddance."

Britain, The Sun said, has had enough of "the antics of Rubin and his foul-mouthed 'revolutionaries.'"

Rubin and a band of Yippie followers disrupted the David Frost television show last Saturday night. They shouted obscenities, threatened to blow up the broadcasting studio, drenched Frost with water and damaged equipment.

My Lai Libel Suit Dismissed by Judge

BOSTON (AP) — A $110 million libel suit against Time magazine by Capt. Ernest Medina of the United States Army has been dismissed by U.S. District Judge Francis J. W. Ford.

Medina is awaiting a military trial on a charge of murder in connection with the alleged My Lai massacre in South Vietnam two years ago.

The magazine article in question reported that an eyewitness had seen Medina shoot a child and inquired why no charges were brought against him at that time.

In his decision Friday, Judge Ford said: "Medina was a public officer . . . in addition a figure of public interest. . . Clearly the publication is entitled to protection and entitled to a judgment in its favor."

The court also noted that Time "asserts that the article was published with the belief that the facts stated were true and without malice."

Cutler Elected

Local 30 of the Department of Veterans' Affairs component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada has elected Kenneth Cutler president for a one-year term.

The 313-member local consists mainly of employees of the Veterans' Hospital and Belmont Building.

Other executive members elected were Ron Richardson, treasurer; Betty Walsh, secretary, and Isobel Richmond, chief shop steward.

'Involve Citizens'

A candidate seeking election to trustee on the Greater Victoria School Board says more citizens should be involved in decisions affecting the educational system.

Frank Preston, 38, announced today he is running for office in the December 12 elections.

He will press for greater citizen participation on educational matters and changes in keeping with the needs of a changing society, he says.

Preston is president of the Victoria Liberal Association and is active in the City Hall Employees Association and the Vancouver Island Anglican Camping Association.

He has also been involved in several community action programs involving education. He is a technician with the city engineering department.

Lansdowne has retained the overall team championship in the annual Victoria junior high schools age-group swimming meet, but you might have a difficult time convincing Oak Bay that "the better team won."

Two Oak Bay relay teams suffered disqualification for false starts Friday and left the championship trophy in Lansdowne.

Lansdowne won the 45th annual meet with 172 points, two more than Oak Bay. Colquitz was a distant third with 100 points as 14 teams vied for honors.

Elementary schools moved into Crystal Garden today for their annual splash.

Oak Bay's disqualifications cost the team a possible 14 points. Lansdowne picked up victories in each event but needed a second-place finish in the final event of the day — the 200-yard boys' club free-style relay — to finish on top.

DOUBLE WINNER

Brian Smith and Judy Hoen, both of Colquitz and Lansdowne's George Gollmer were double winners.

Smith won the novice backstroke and breaststroke races for 15-and-16-year-olds while Gollmer captured the 50-yard club butterfly and 100-yard club freestyle events.

Miss Hoen won the novice 50-yard freestyle and backstroke events for 14-year-olds.

Pact Gives CBC Rights to Games

OTTAWA (CP) — Health Minister John Munro and CBC president George Davidson have signed an agreement giving the CBC radio and television broadcasting rights for the 1971 Canada Winter Games in Saskatoon, Feb. 11-22.

A CBC announcement said 15 hours of television coverage and more than seven hours of radio broadcasts are planned during the games.

Race Important To Point Leaders

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP)— They will try again Sunday to run the $92,200 American 500 stock car race which twice had been rained out.

The race is important in the battle between Bobby Isaac and Bobby Allison, both Dodge drivers, for the NASCAR Grand National driving title. Isaac leads by 85 points, with 3,751 to Allison's 3,666. The championship pays a record $100,000 bonus this year.

Most of the 40 cars which qualified have remained in the speedway's garage area for more than three weeks.

The race was rained out on Oct. 25 and Nov. 1.

CAMELLIA BOWL TEAMS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Montana and North Dakota State have been selected to meet in the Camellia Bowl Dec. 12 to settle the U.S. western college football championship.

Sno Birds Preparing For New Ski Season

Some snow has already settled on the slopes of Green Mountain east of Nanaimo and work parties from the lower Vancouver Island skiing community are needed to help groom the Sno Bird Ski Club facilities for another season.

Volunteers who put in a day's labor on the slopes and-or buildings receive tokens worth a $2 reduction on either, T-bar lift fees or overnight accommodation.

The road has been regraded and one of the hairpin turns has now been widened.

Both parking lots are expanded and the beginner's slope has been levelled off. Work is also progressing on grading the slpe at the bottom of the T-bar.

Sno Bird Ski Club spokesman Rick Burgess said Friday that facilities are expected to open for the general public around Dec. 12.

Bunny Sterling Keeps Ring Title

MELBOURNE, Australia (Reuter) — Bunny Sterling, the Jamaican-born British champion, easily retained the Commonwealth middleweight boxing title when he outpointed Kahu Mahanga of New Zealand in a 15-round bout here Friday night.

Sterling was making his first defence of the title, which he won together with the British crown by stopping Mark Rowe in London in September.

Germany Wins Berth

WARSAW (Reuter) — West Germany qualified for Group A of the world ice hockey championships when it beat Poland 10-7 on aggregate after tying 4-4 here Thursday night in the second leg of their qualifying round.

Oakville Seniors Sign Bob Taylor

OAKVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Bobby Taylor traded his football boots for a pair of skates Friday when he signed with Oakville Oaks of the Ontario Hockey Association Senior A series.

The Toronto Argonaut flanker's signing was announced by Oaks' manager Earl Were, who said he's also been talking with goaltender Ken Broderick, ex-Canadian Naional star and more recently with Minnesota North Stars of the National Hockey League.

Broderick, however, is still waiting for his amateur reinstatement from the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association.

Library Invitations Issued

To celebrate Young Canada's Book Week, Vancouver Island Regional Library has issued invitations to schools to visit its branch libraries.

Besides local book displays in Sooke, Colwood and Sidney, there will be several highlights.

A book fair will be held next week from Thursday to Saturday at Colwood and Sidney branches. Children's paperbacks chosen from major juvenile wholesalers will be on sale, with many quality picture-books included, as well as a wide field to choose from for the age bracket of four to seven.

In Sooke a special art contest will be held for boys and girls based on their favorite storybook. It is sponsored by VIRL in co-operation with the Shirley Women's Institute.

Canadian Pacer Was Great But His Mourners Are Few

By DAVID MILLER

TORONTO (CP) — This is the story of the life and death of a great Canadian race horse.

It is not about a Northern Dancer, a Nijinsky or an Armbro Flight. It is not about a horse that Canadians from coast to coast know by name or reputation.

But it is a story that should be told.

FASTEST PACER

The horse was R. Yankee Wann, the fastest pacer ever bred in Canada and probably the top Canadian-foaled standardbred in history.

He died Oct. 17 of colitis, an intestinal disorder, and his death notice in most areas was a two-paragraph sports item listing his career records.

His mourners are few—mostly centred in the Belleville, Ont., area where he was bred by Don Chatterson and owned by Campbell Wannamaker of Consecon, Ont.

But anyone who saw R. Yankee Wann pace the first quarter and the home stretch will remember the proud stallion who raced throughout his career for trainer-driver Rejean Boily, an adopted son of Wannamaker's.

SNUFFED OUT HOPE

R. Yankee Wann was seven when he died, snuffing out hopes of continuing his Yankee Chief-Ramona Grace bloodline and ending a racing career that could have extended until he was 14—mandatory age for retirement of harness horses.

R. Yankee Wann died with record Canadian earnings of $208,138 and the distinction of being the fastest standardbred in Canadian history.

The Canadian Trotting Association records his mile at 1:57 1-5 Aug. 8 at Vernon, N.Y, as the fastest ever paced by a Canadian horse. The former record of 1:57 ¾ was held by Alberta-bred Winnipeg and taken in 1928 at Toledo, Ohio.

In 1970, R. Yankee Wann started 35 times with 16 wins, five seconds and seven thirds and $61,278 in purses.

Those are the statistics, but only part of the story of R. Yankee Wann.

He was always an underrated horse and invariably left the gate at long odds. But he consistently beat the best on Ontario's Jockey Club circuit and tangled with top American pacers on a regular basis on New York tracks.

Boily had his own style of handling R. Yankee Wann. He would move the brown stallion quickly out of the gate, back up the field to the half and then open up coming home, often in 29 seconds or less.

But, despite his great winning performance in 1969, R. Yankee Wann was a loser in annual harness racing awards.

JUST MISSED

His background, checked by columnist Terry Fraser of the Toronto Star, shows he missed to Blaze Pick in 1969 for Canada's aged pacer of the year award and was edged by Super Wave for Jockey Club horse of the year honors.

So there will be no official remembrance for the small horse with the long pacing stride.

Horsemen will remember, however.

Leeds Widens Gap With 3-1 Victory

LONDON (CP) — Johnny Giles, Jack Charlton and Paul Madeley scored goals in Leeds United's 3-1 victory over Blackpool today—a victory that left Leeds at the top of the English League soccer standings by two points over Arsenal and Tottenham.

Arsenal stayed close by getting a point in a 1-1 draw with Crystal Palace. John Radford scored for Arsenal in the 16th minute and a minute later Alan Birchenall levelled the score for Palace, the team that knocked out Arsenal in English League Cup play in mid-week.

Alan Mullery and James Pearce scored two goals in the last three minutes to give Tottenham a 2-0 away victory over Chelsea.

Police Court

Kenneth Thompson, 29, currently in jail on a two-year sentence for breaking and entering, received Friday in court a further three-year sentence for attempted uttering of a forged cheque.

The terms were concurrent.

He asked Judge William Ostler to consider his wife and five children.

"I would like to consider your children but it's clear you have no consideration for them. You've been of precious little use to them haven't you?" the judge said.

Montgomery Jones, 17, of 1040 Princess was ordered to serve 18 months' probation and had sentence suspended on a charge of theft over $50.

A probation officer said he had been responding well and "there is a good chance this will be the last time he will be in trouble."

Stephen Carroll, 19, of 1233 Fairfield, was placed on one-year probation and had sentence suspended by Judge Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre on a charge uttering a phony cheque and theft under $50.

"I'm only doing that because of your good background and because you are going on with your education," the judge said.

'Do 1,000 Cartoons, Burn Them'

CARMEL VALLEY, Calif. (UPI) — Bob Barnes, who created the synidicated comic strip, "The Better Half," died Thursday of cancer. He was 57.

His wife, Ruth, who had collaborated with him on the strip, said she would continue it for the Des Moines Register and Tribune Syndicate.

Funeral arrangements are pending.

"The Better Half" contained humurous verbal exchanges between "Stanley and Harriet Parker," a fictitious couple described as living "in the little house down the block."

Barnes once advised aspiring cartoonists to "do 1,000 cartoons, take them out in the back yard and burn them."

"I tell them this because I think it's the only way for them to get the garbage out of their systems," he explained.

WATCH, DON'T WADE AT GOLDSTREAM

Conservation leaders today asked for further co-operation of Greater Victoria residents in safeguarding the spawning salmon at Goldstream.

Al Wright, president of the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association, said that he, like many others, was delighted to see so many watching the run.

"But, probably because there are no signs, some people are wading in where the water is shallow. They often walk right through to the other bank. What they don't realize is that they are disturbing the sperm.

"If they would also stop their children from throwing rocks it would be a big help."

BUSH BABY, 2½-year-old Kim, thrives on Canadian life after being brought here from Kenya by his owner, Mrs. Barry Riseborough, 1723 Feltham. Instead of dining on grasshoppers, as he did before coming here, he now settles for meal worms, fruit and marshmallows. Visitors to the home are intrigued by his 10-feet leaps. A member of the Middle Temple in London, Eng., Mrs. Riseborough spent 25 years in Kenya and was appointed a juvenile court judge. (William A. Boucher Photo).

PET MANIA IN FULL SWING

Moscow Going to the Dogs

By SUSAN JACOBY

MOSCOW (WP) — The small white poodle could have been the pampered pet of a Park Avenue matron. She wore a jewelled collar, sported a blue bow in her hair and trotted along on manicured paws with painted coral toenails.

The dog belonged to a dumpy man who was running to catch a crowded bus. Pedigreed pets are recognized status symbols in the Soviet capital but they ride the buses and subway with less elite humans.

The dog business is booming in Moscow today. Ten years ago foreign tourists often remarked about the scarcity of dogs on the city's streets.

Moscow still has a long way to go before its dog population approaches New York's 500,000 or Los Angeles' 300,000.

But the number of dogs is increasing rapidly as new apartment construction eases the housing shortage and the general standard of living improves. Many Muscovites who used to share kitchens and bathrooms with other families in communal flats now have their own apartments.

"Just try keeping a barking dog in a flat you share with five other families," said one woman who was walking her noisy fox terrier around a judging ring at a citywide dog show. "I got my dog as soon as I received my new apartment two years ago."

More than 10,000 pedigreed dogs — an increase of nearly 70 per cent since 1965 — are registered with Moscow's two main dog clubs.

Prices are low by western standards. A purebred fox terrier costs 50 rubles ($55.55 at the official rate of exchange); poodle 75 rubles. Some people privately pay higher prices for puppies to avoid long waiting lists.

"We can't begin to meet the demand for dogs," said a staff member of the Hunting Society, which handles spaniels, terriers and various Russian breeds of hunting dogs.

The demand for poodles and other largely ornamental dogs is even greater in relation to supply, partly because such breeds are not as common as larger dogs in Moscow and partly because they are regarded as status symbols.

One woman was on a waiting list two years before obtaining her poodle, officially registered with the Moscow Decorative Dog Club.

She proudly displays a pedigree card showing that her pet is related to a dog owned by the family of a high government official.

Dog owner elitism is disapproved by some Russians. One man climbed behind the wheel of a car, settling his dog beside him. A babushka (grandmother), exercising the busybody prerogatives accorded to all old women in Russian society, shook her finger sternly at the man.

"You are making a conspicuous display of wealth by having that dog ride in the front seat next to you," she said. "You are trying to show you are better than your comrades."

Muscovites not interested in pedigrees often buy their dogs at a Sunday-morning institution called the "Bird Market," one of the eccentric private enterprises still permitted by the Soviet government. There farmers from the Moscow area sell truckloads of pigeons, another common pet. It is possible to buy almost anything from a goldfish to a raccoon.

In summer, there is a large selection of dogs every Sunday. Sellers pack litters of puppies into shopping bags, sometimes bringing along the mother to show prospective customers how large the dogs are likely to grow. Most puppies sell for three to seven rubles in the Bird Market.

Moscow residents are not troubled by the major problem that plagues dog owners in most western cities — where to walk their pets. Moscow has much more green space than most American cities, including scraggly patches for dogs as well as manicured parks.

Little Grace Doll Leaves for Big Lot

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — They saw little Grace Doll off to the Big Lot Thursday.

About 100 persons, most of them circus folk and including the wife of the great clown Emmett Kelly, viewed the body as it lay in a child's coffin at a funeral parlor.

Gracie Doll was a three-foot-tall midget, born Freida Schneider in Germany. She died at 71 after a long circus career.

Frank Cucksey, himself just over four feet tall, said after the service:

"Tell the people Gracie Doll has gone to the Big Lot. That's what we circus people call heaven."

Cucksey said he met Gracie when both played Munchkins in the Judy Garland movie The Wizard of Oz in 1938.

"Grace Doll was magic," he said. "She could stand in front of millions of big people, and when they saw her, something happened. They saw this tiny person in front of them, dancing, singing and laughing, and she turned the big people into little people. She made them children once again."

Strangelove Alive and Well . . . and Flying

By DAVID HOFFMAN

WASHINGTON (WP) — Be forewarned, airline passengers, your pilot may not be sane. And if indeed he's not sane, the Federal Aviation Administration, the national transportation safety board, U.S. airlines, courts and sky marshals — none are geared to catch him.

Flying is statistically safe. Given that caveat, consider the following:

High above Oklahoma City recently, an FAA instructor pilot, an examiner of airline captains, wrenched his Boeing 720 into a steep, climbing turn. "Damn Japs put a lot of flak down there," he reportedly told the co-pilot. "Guadalcanal's always a tough target." The co-pilot dispatched him with a tight right cross and landed the jet himself.

An airline captain grew increasingly mad at his Los Angeles-based company. Landing at a town in Utah, he left his plane, his co-pilot and a cabin full of passengers, ostensibly to check the weather. Instead, he walked through the terminal and took a bus 300 miles home.

At a base just outside Washington, an air force lieutenant colonel, a command pilot, goes to the shower three, four or five times each day. So furiously does he scrub himself that skin peels from his palms and fingers. As a result, the colonel cannot always bear to touch the control wheel, so periodically he grounds himself.

A stewardess was missing her captain. Waiting at the top of a St. Louis airport stairwell, she heard the snarls and barks of an angry dog coming from around her ankles. Then she felt teeth pepetrate her nylons. The captain, in uniform, had crawled up the stairs and bitten her calf. "I like to play dog," she said he told her.

Time Factor

Prior to every flight, a Boston-based captain used to walk slowly through the cabin, looking at each passenger. By the time he reached the cockpit, he know precisely how many black people were aboard his airplane. Then he multiplied the total by ten to get minutes. He would delay the flight that many minutes because his company had failed again to provide separate but equal facilities.

Air force and airline pilots annually, biannually or triannually are sent aloft in altitude chambers, forced to leap in frigid pools, ordered to fire high-powered pistols — all for safety's sake. They are examined for heart defects, tooth defects, rectal cancer and syphilis. They wear their blood type around their necks (near the radiation detector), and their footprints are on file with the flight surgeon.

But never is their sanity challenged.

'Pilot Error'

The "system" incorporates no checks, no texts whatsoever to detect dangerous psychoses in aviators it "certificates" safe to fly. Accordingly, when such an aviator causes an accident, the accident's "probable cause" is hidden behind a euphemism. The government declares stuffily that "pilot error" caused the crash.

Where does the government's responsibility begin and end?

Federal Aviation Administrator John Shaffer shook his head numbly as he described a recent light plane accident. "Their clothes were stacked neatly behind the cockpit," he said. Both the pilot and his companion were nude when the aircraft struck the ground. Now what can the government do about that? Shaffer asked rhetorically.

Paradoxically, almost haphazardly, the system does weed out a great many psychotics bent on flying airplanes. Last year, 748,700 airmen underwent physical examination for various licenses granted by the FAA, a total of 3,923 (0.82 per cent) failed to pass.

Analysis of the unfit in previous years indicates that nervous and mental disabilities grounded 20 per cent of those examined. Yet aeromedical examiners (6,000 physicians are so designated by FAA) depend almost entirely on the patient's confessing his proglem or supplying a clue inadvertently.

Extreme Case

In fact, each physician so designated must wrestle with conflicting interests—the interest of his patient and the interest of the public. In many cases, the patient's interest is to continue flying regardless of his hangup. The public's interest requires grounding the patient. But if the doctor opts for grounding, a public act, he frequently exposes himself to lawsuits.

Dr. Herbert C. Haynes, FAA's top psychiatrist, cites an extreme case. One of America's most prominent psychiatrists, one recognized by all his peers, discovered a potentially dangerous psychosis in a patient the doctor knew was also a pilot. Question: should the doctor advise FAA of the man's dangerous disability?

The doctor's private lawyer, lawyers for his university, lawyers at the department of justice — all advised the psychiatrist to keep silent to avoid a suit for damages. So far as is known, the doctor's patient still flies.

When commercial pilots undergo their semi-annual or annual flight physicals, they complete medical history forms with dozens of yes or no questions. Many are designed to spot psychoses.

Each pilot's examination is forwarded to Oklahoma City and punched into a FAA computer. The computer compares that pilot's most recent physical with his two previous physicals. Discrepancies that might endanger pilot or passengers are spewed out by the machine.

The real problem is the same whether the couch be owned by FAA or a private psychiatrist. As Haynes puts it: "Those who are crazy just don't know it."

BAGHDAD (AP) — The Iraqi government said Wednesday it would free all persons imprisoned under a state of emergency imposed 12 years ago and lifted last month. The announcement did not mention the number of prisoners involved. All firms and offices closed under the decree will be allowed to reopen, the statement said.

B.C. PENITENTIARY . . . scene of human relations experiment

EXPERIMENT

Human Relations Goes to Jail

NEW WESTMINSTER, (CP) — A man with a number and a mug shot on file is still a human being.

This is the message of a human relations course at the B.C. penitentiary which is being undertaken voluntarily by 75 corrections officers of that institution and the Matsqui prison for addict offenders.

The 15-week program is the first of its kind in British Columbia and one of three in correctional institutions across Canada.

Its goal, simply, is to bring a little more humanity into prison life.

"What we're doing is helping the staff become more aware of things that determine what causes people to do what they do," explained instructor Lyle Howarth.

"The end result of these programs is that people treat others in a different, more humane, way. They no longer treat other people as 'things'."

T. W. Hall, western regional director of the Canadian penitentiary service, said the value of the course has been demonstrated at Drumheller penitentiary in Alberta, where Howarth began a similar program in 1968.

"The problem for centuries has been to break down the invisible barriers between staff and inmates."

"After going through these sessions, the officers are going to understand themselves and the inmates better and relationships cannot help but improve."

"At Drumheller, the climate of the institution and relationships between staff and imates have changed. You don't sense tension there."

One of the sessions, at which a reporter sat in, included a couple of impromptu skits, informal debates and a demonstration of techniques which inhibit communications between two persons.

At one point, Howarth asked: "Have you ever thought about what its' like for the average guy to come in here through admissions?

"He comes in the Black Maria; we put him into a cage with a sliding iron door; he's called out, booked in, stripped, showered, given a medical examination for communicable disease, deloused if necessary.

"It's all completely impersonal and to a person going through it for the first time it must be utterly humiliating. And that first hour gives him his concept of a prison."

Prison officers are told the job of improving rehabilitation work is largely up to them.

Said Howarth, a 20-year veteran of the correctional service: "We'll never have enough psychiatrists, psychologists or social workers at our correctional institutions."

"If the job is to be done, it will be done by the guy who has direct contact with inmates."

'United We Stand, Boys . . .'

ATHENS (AP) — Suffering husbands unite! That's the slogan of a group of married men who have formed the Wretched Husbands Club and are seeking legal recognition.

It all started one night in an Athens tavern, says a founding member who prefers to remain anonymous. "One of us looked at his watch, jumped up and said: 'Good lord, my wife is waiting, I must go,' and left," he relates.

"Others followed soon and the party was wrecked.

"The idea was born that night: to form our own club of suffering husbands."

The association has applied in court for approval to function as a legal body. Its headquarters will be in Athens, with branches in other parts of Greece later.

Some of the rules are stiff. You cannot be divorced or separated. You must prove that you are a "good family man."

The association's lawyer, K. Perdikis, says its charter specifies that an eligible member must be a husband who really suffers from the "bonds of matrimony, but heroically puts up with the consequences."

Membership will make the husband's "wretchedness or martyrdom legal . . . that is, on paper," Perdikis adds.

Criminals Hanged

PRETORIA (Reuter) — A man and a woman were hanged at Pretoria central prison Friday after last-minute atempts in South African courts to halt their execution failed. Maria Groesbeek, 34, convicted of poisoning her first husband; and Louis Winterbach van Rensburg, 27, found guilty of teacher, were hanged at down.

"All of a sudden Albert started calling me baby. I think it was after the Panama Canal."

These are not good times we live in.

The Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Because I'm so attached to my birds, I'd like to keep track of anything new that is supposed to keep them happier and healthier. They are now coming out, I've noticed, with a bird cage litter. The litter is to keep things neater and seems like a good idea to me. What do you think of it?—D.I.

DEAR R.I.: Laying a little litter on the cage bottom may, indeed, make housekeeping easier and it's reasonably safe to use. However, if the idea is to cut housekeeping chores down to once a week, for example, then the longer-lasting litter is not a good idea. While it will absorb moisture and cut down odor, the litter does not prevent multiplication of parasites nor bacterial or fungal build-up in the droppings so that litter left in the bottom of the cage for a prolonged period of time can build up to a dangerous level of contamination. If you are buying the litter to leave in the cage—forget it.

DEAR DR. MILLER: When we first got our kitten—that was three weeks ago—he was white as the driven snow and very beautiful. Since then, he has become quite dingy and we resorted to powdering and brushing him in an attempt to keep him clean. We are using a sort of baby powder with added boric acid to keep him extra sanitary. The trouble is he licks it off and makes himself sick. How can we prevent him from doing this? Don't say to quit using powder. We've tried that and he simply ignores the cleaning job himself and soon looks a mess. He does look so pretty when he is clean.—S.J.

DEAR S.J.: There are powders and other grooming aids on the market you can safely use for your cat but you had better stop using the powder you are now using—and quickly. Boric acid is a poison. A comparatively small amount can not only make your kitten sick, it can kill him. Use only a preparation specifically made for cats.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Yellow Bird, my canary, has had chapped legs recently and she hasn't been out in the cold wind, either. They look real rough and scaly. Then this friend of mine stopped by and said they looked like they were due to mites and they should be treated with a mixture of five parts mineral oil and one part oil of caraway. Would this mixture be safe and effective to use if mites is her problem?—G.A.

DEAR G.A.: Yes, used in moderation on the legs, the above oily formula should be "mitey" effective—if mites are the problem.

Repercussions From Ryerson Press Sale Continue to Be Felt

TORONTO (CP) — Repercussions from the announced sale of Ryerson Press to United States interests continued to be felt Friday as the former owner, the United Church of Canada, expressed hope that the governments of Ontario and Canada will take steps to ensure continued Canadian ownership of the textbook-publishing firm.

Last week the church announced it had agreed to sell Ryerson to McGraw-Hill Corp. of New York. The price was reported to be $2 million.

In Friday developments:

—Donald MacDonald, former provincial New Democratic Party leader, suggested the Ontario government take over Ryerson and operate it as a sort of provincial Queen's Printer.

—A spokesman for Manitoba's department of industry and commerce said a delegation will visit Toronto next week to see if the book publishing operation of Ryerson Press is worth bidding on.

—The United Church insisted it had informed federal Trade Minister Jean-Luc Pepin months ago of the possibility that Ryerson would be sold to an American company and released correspondence to that effect.

—About 30 printers from the printing and bookbinding division of Ryerson Press met three Ontario cabinet ministers Friday in the hope of getting a government commitment that their jobs will be secure. They left disappointed.

The public's opposition to the sale of the 140-year-old textbook firm to an American company resulted in a meeting Tuesday between church officials and McGraw-Hill and Premier John Robarts. But no results were announced beyond a statement that another meeting will be held.

The church's statement, its first since the sale, said: "It is also our hope that both federal and provincial governments will now, and in the future, take more creative and vigorous action to strengthen the position of Canadian nature of broadcasting in our country and to undergird other fields of the arts."

The statement said offers by Canadians to purchase Ryerson Press "fell far short of the worth of the firm as seen by the McGraw-Hill company.

"It is impossible of course, for a church to sustain continuing and heavy losses of funds contributed to it for charitable and religious purposes in order to retain possession of a commercial enterprise.

During a meeting of the newly-formed Emergency Committee of Canadian Publishers, Mr. MacDonald said the Ontario government could use Ryerson to publish Hansard, the official report of government proceedings. Other material could be printed when the legislature is not sitting.

Hansard now is printed by private firms on contract.

About 100 attended the committee meeting, representing 14 Canadian publishing houses from Vancouver to Fredericton, which was called to discuss the Ryerson sale. The committee earlier this week called for legislation halting the sale.

The Manitoba representative stressed that next week's trip would be purely exploratory but said the idea of moving the operation to Winnipeg presents "all kinds of possibilities," including the production of textbooks for the province's school systems and also perhaps those of the other Prairie provinces.

In the letters to Mr. Pepin the church said: "At the present time the only firm showing genuine interest is American" and the church would be unhappy selling to an American publisher.

The church was commenting on a statement by Mr. Pepin in the Commons Thursday in which he said he had been informed by the church of its financial difficulties but that the church did not mention the "actual possibility it was going to be taken over."

Italy Warms To Selassie

VENICE (AP) — Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie flew home today from an eight-day visit that produced one of the warmest receptions post-war Italy has given to a visiting head of state.

The 78-year-old ruler drew applauding crowds in Rome, Genoa, Turin, Milan and Venice, and was praised almost daily in newspaper editorials.

He came to Italy Nov. 6 for the first time since 1924, 11 years before Fascist dictator Benito Mussolini launched his invasion of Ethiopia.

Aspirin Possible Aid In Clot Prevention

TORONTO (CP) — Aspirin may prove useful in preventing blood clots, two Montreal researchers report in the November issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

Serge Renaud and Jean Godu, of the Montreal Heart Institute and the University of Montreal laboratory of experimental pathology, say aspirin prevents blood clots in rats and in human blood in test tubes.

They cautioned that further experiments are needed before they can say how the aspirin, acetylsalicylic acid, exerts its anti-clotting effect.

Formation of blood clots is a major concern in connection with heart attacks and strokes.

Men on Parliament Hill Hard at Work on New Dictionary

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — Some recent jargon from Parliament Hill:

Enter the life cycle—to be born; Courtesy of the Liberal party in a free-time CBC political broadcast.

Penitentiary premises—a jail; Solicitor-General George McIlraith said it.

Consumers of welfare services—the poor. Welfare Minister John Munro first used this one.

Reverse upward trend — decline. Thank the finance department.

To plateau—to reach a certain level. Fisheries Minister Jack Davis takes the credit.

Compensation—MPs' pay, in the phrase of Allan MacEachen, government House leader.

Revenue Minister Herb Gray reported Oct. 5 that material is not seized by customs officers but "is detained for further examination."

Clients of the Canada manpower Centre—the unemployed; Mr. MacEachen again.

Taxpayer service—tax collection; a revenue department euphemism.

Dormatize and dedormatize—to make dormant and to revive. Justice Minister John Turner used both these words in explaining the new Public Order Temporary Measures 1970 Act.

Air Canada does not fire anyone. It has, instead, "some special retirements," the airline told former prime minister John Diefenbaker through a Commons written return.

External environmental diseconomy—pollution.

Unitize—to unify. NDP Leader T. C. Douglas said it.

Robert Stanbury, minister without portfolio responsible for Information Canada, reported Nov. 9 that the agency held a four-day conference outside Ottawa "in order that delegates could work efficiently."

A Christmas stocking brimming with all kinds of little goodies feeds your children's holiday hopes. Some of the contents will be eaten, others will be enjoyed 'til trampled underfoot or else swallowed by the vacuum cleaner. Short-lived toy fun—it has its place! But here's a stocking tail of another colour. You'll be hard put to find one large enough to hide and hold many of these toys. But it matters not when you can give a gift tailored to turn a tot's head to a singular childhood delight—the delight of a long-lasting toy treasure. Come in and see our wide eye-popping selection or phone us today!

PIERRE ELLIOTT TRUDEAU

Thoughts On Man And Politics

Special to The Times

Editor's Note: It's a quirk of fate that Prime Minister Trudeau's 1958 book, "Approaches to Politics," is to be published for the first time in an English translation Nov. 19. While it is not suggested that the prime minister's decision to invoke the War Measures Act necessarily represented a change in his philosophy, these quotes from more than a decade ago are fascinating today.

The following is the first of two selections from the book. The second will be published in Monday's Times.

By PIERRE ELLIOTT TRUDEAU

We give politicians the power of life and death over us; we authorize them to send us to war, imprison us, tax us, regulate our activity, expropriate our houses, discipline our children, supervise our conduct, our reading and our speech. We let these men make the laws that restrict us, direct the policemen who arrest us, choose the lawyers who prosecute us, appoint the judges who sentence us ... Should one of them happen to over-step the bounds, we allow him to be made a judge or a legislator for life in one of our upper houses.

We are going to be governed whether we like it or not; it is up to us to see that we are governed no worse than is absolutely necessary. We must therefore concern ourselves with politics, as Pascal said, to mitigate as far as possible the madness of our rulers.

Sermons and worthy books are always talking of respect for the human personality and of the inviolability of conscience. In the context of our Christian civilization, these phrases have no meaning unless all men are regarded as fundamentally free and equal, each man being of infinite value in himself, bound only by his own conscience; from which it must follow that neither authority or obedience ought to be taken for granted. If my father, my priest or my king wants to exert authority over me, if he wants to give me orders, he has to be able to explain, in a way that satisfies my reason, on what grounds he must command and I must obey.

Democracy recognizes that one person may be right and ninety-nine wrong; that is why freedom of speech is sacred. The one person must always have the right to proclaim his truth in the hope of persuading the ninety-nine to change their point of view.

What is the source of the astonishingly universal law that gives so much power to our political leaders? Some take the easy way out by reiterating that authority comes from God. They omit to explain why God conferred it on a Stalin or a Hitler; or why, in our democracies, God would choose to express Himself through the intermediary of electoral thugs and big campaign contributors.

As long as authority does not pass all bounds of stupidity and incompetence, it is sure to hold its position.

The purpose of living in society is that every man may fulfil himself as far as possible. Authority has no justification except to allow the establishment and development of a system that encourages such fulfilment.

Society is made for man; if it serves him badly he is entitled to overthrow it.

One can say that the power of governments rests on a psychological disposition on most people's part that it is good to obey and bad to disobey. Why is this belief universal? Partly because the majority seek only their own comfort and pleasure: When these ends are assured, they ask no more than to conform to a given social order and to obey political masters who work to maintain that order. Few men are aroused by injustice when they are sure of not being its victims themselves.

Paper to Define Police Powers

QUEBEC (CP) — Justice Minister Jerome Choquette said Friday that a white paper on law enforcement being prepared by his department will deal basically with the organization of Quebec police forces and touch on possible restrictions of certain civil liberties.

Choquette told a news conference that the study, to be made public next year, will cover the training, qualifications, equipment and numbers of police in the province as well as the possible legalization of wire tapping and bugging practices.

A suggestion he raised last week that personal identification cards should be issued for all Quebecers will also be included in the white paper report, the minister said.

Earlier in the national assembly while announcing the study, Choquette said it was being prepared to show "what means of control the government should have."

In Montreal, meanwhile, police reported no new developments in the hunt for the kidnappers of British trade envoy James C. Cross, 49, held since Oct. 5, and Quebec labor minister Pierre Laporte, abducted Oct. 10 and slain Oct. 17.

The Montreal Gazette said today that three of the kidnappers may have escaped from an apartment where police arrested Bernard Lortie, 19-year-old student who admitted taking part in the kidnapping of Laporte.

The Gazette says a high-ranking police official reported all four were in the Montreal apartment, but three hid in a cubbyhole in a walk-in clothes closet when police confronted Lortie.

Police made a room-by-room check, placed a guard

Lemieux Demands Freedom

MONTREAL (CP) — Lawyer Marcel Cinq-Mars, president of the Quebec Bar Association, said today he has received a copy of a letter purportedly signed by lawyer Robert Lemieux, in prison now charged with seditious conspiracy under the War Measures Act.

Cinq-Mars said in an interview the 32-page letter, directed to him Friday by French-language radio station CKLM to which the original was delivered, contained five demands.

They were: That Lemieux be given access to his files; that he obtain bail; that procedures on the charges against him be stopped; that the Quebec Bar intervene "in the face of the degredation of the administration of justice in Quebec;" and that the Bar nominate a lawyer or a committee to oversee "the affair."

Cinq-Mars said he had not yet verified the authenticity of the letter.

SYRIANS CALM FOLLOWING COUP

DAMASCUS (AP) — Defence Minister Hafez al-Assad seized control of Syria's government today after a quiet midnight coup that overthrew the Marxist civilian government.

Most citizens of Damascus—25 miles from the front lines of the Israeli army—were unaware that a coup had taken place and that their government leaders were in jail.

This Syrian capital was calm, with no signs of trouble on the surface and no unusual military activity.

Arab diplomatic sources said Assad and his men arrested President Noureddin Atassi, Premier Youssef Zayyen and Maj.-Gen. Salah Jadid, a leader of the Syrian Baath party, in raids on their homes late Friday, the Moslem sabbath. Jadid's only title is assistant secretary-general of the party, but he was the behind-the-scenes strongman of the Atassi regime.

None of the arrested men was harmed, the sources said.

Social Credit Meeting Backs Gaglardi Policy

By BRUCE YEMEN
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — If the Social Credit convention is any indication, Reibilitation Minister Phil Gaglardi is riding a wave of friendly public opinion in his war on the welfare rolls.

"Thank you much for strengthening my hand," Gaglardi told cheering delegates Friday night after they quickly passed resolutions in favor of "work-for-welfare" for able-bodied recipients, a six-month welfare eligibility period for out-of-province applicants and against "abuses" by welfare recipients.

Delegates tabled a resolution from Fort George after being warned by some speakers that it could open the party to "nonsense criticism" from newspapers and others.

'HUMAN MISFITS'

The resolution stated that "our province is becoming a haven for all the human misfits on the North American continent" and asked for the government to take "this type of person" off welfare and to take "further steps to correct this social menace in our midst."

In response to a resolution calling for able-bodied recipients to be put to work Gaglardi said a pilot project is getting under way in Langley to provide about 20 social assistance recipients with municipal jobs after a training period.

More Socred Stories Page 6

Federal, provincial and municipal governments would share in the costs of the program, which Gaglardi described as a "type of subsidy." He said he has urged the idea be extended to as many parts of the province as possible during the winter.

DENIES CHARGE

Gaglardi also explained that he didn't refuse to accept a number of Tibetan refugees being brought to Canada by the federal government. "We suggested there would be better places to put them," he said.

He said B.C. still has welfare recipients who came here as refugees from the Hungarian revolution.

"We're right behind you," a delegate shouted to Gaglardi.

The minister said about 50 per cent of single young men and women on the welfare rolls are from out of the province and about 34 per cent are married couples.

"That means we're carrying a burden for the other provinces," he said.

In other moves, delegates:

- Defeated a resolution calling for an end to further relaxation of liquor laws.
- Defeated a proposed ban on strikes or lockouts after Labor Minister Les Peterson said only Communist countries have succeeded in that aim and they "weren't particularly good examples to follow."
- Defeated a resolution calling on the provincial government to go into the automobile insurance business on a competitive basis with private companies.
- Approved a resolution

60,000 Death Toll Feared In Tidal Wave

DACCA (Reuter) — About 60,000 people may have drowned when a hurricane-driven tidal wave smashed into heavily-populated Hatia Island at the mouth of the River Ganges in East Pakistan.

The magnitude of the disaster has not been confirmed so far because communication with the island has been blacked out since the 120-miles-an-hour winds of a hurricane ripped across the delta area Thursday.

The official count so far is 800 dead, Radio Pakistan said today, but unofficial reports say that half of Hatia Island's 120,000 population is feared to have been swept away by the 15-foot tidal wave.

The radio said damage to houses, other property and crops was described as colossal.

Three launches set out with medical aid and supplies for Hatia where at least 500 persons had died, the radio added.

A helicopter also dropped supplies there and three gunboats of the Pakistan navy left Chittagong for the area with relief supplies, it added.

Government officials here have been trying desperately to re-establish telecommunications contact with Hatia Island 150 miles to the south, and other islands ravaged by the hurricane.

LOSSES HEAVY

Reports from other points have listed additional heavy death tolls and crippling losses of houses, cattle and crops.

Nothing is known of the fate of between 15,000 and 20,000 Hindus who went to Dubla

FLQ Suspect Worked For Premier

MONTREAL (CP) — A lawyer said Saturday that Jocelyne Despatie, charged with seditious conspiracy in the Front de Liberation du Quebec crisis, was a receptionist for a while in the Montreal office of Premier Robert Bourassa of Quebec.

Miss Despatie, 25, was charged Friday with seditious conspiracy and with being or declaring herself to be a member of the outlawed FLQ.

Her lawyer, Michel Proulx, said in an interview Miss Despatie did not work in the premier's office "after Oct. 8," three days after British diplomat James Cross was kidnapped.

Murder Suspects Charged in Court

Two young Canadian Armed Forces servicemen and an unemployed Victoria man were charged in Victoria Provincial Court today with the non-capital murder of part-time cab driver, Gerald Mulholland, 37.

William A. Larlham, 20, and Garry Smith, 18, both of CFB Esquimalt, and Terrance Parsons, 20, 1339 Newport, were remanded in custody until Monday when they appeared before Judge Edmond St. Jorre.

FOUND TUESDAY

Mulholland was found at 7:45 p.m. Tuesday slumped over the wheel of his taxi in the 600 block Battery Street in James Bay.

He was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Joseph's Hospital a short time later, and an autopsy indicated the cause of death was severed artery at the base of the skull.

The dead man, who lived at 917 Bewdley, drove cab part-time when he was off-duty as a CFB seaman stationed at Esquimalt.

Police found his empty wallet in a garbage container in an alley behind 150 Douglas.

PLAYED SOCCER

Mulholland was an active man, playing goal for Gorge Molsons of the Victoria and District Soccer League of the third division. He had been selected to represent British Columbia on a Victoria armed forces team in a national soccer tournament for the Canadian Armed Forces championship at Kingston, Ont.

Rewards totalling $2,300 were put up Thursday jointly by the Victoria police commission and C and C Transportation Co. Ltd., which operates a fleet of taxis in Victoria.

A police spokesman said Friday following the arrest of the three he was unable to say whether the reward posting had any effect in apprehending the accused.

The notice said the expiry date for the money was Nov. 1, 1971, and in the case of more than one claimant the commission would apportion the sum.

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP) —An explosion rocked an oil platform off the Louisiana coast Friday night, gushing a hot chemical liquid onto a work area and burning 14 men, three of them critically, a Humber Oil and Refining Co. spokesman said.

Canadian GM Strike 'Not Over'

TORONTO (CP) — An official of the United Auto Workers warned today that the union still has "a long way to go" in contract negotiations with General Motors of Canada Ltd.

Commenting on the tentative settlement reached between GM and the UAW in the United States, Abe Taylor said that "if anyone thinks the strike is over yet they had better reconsider."

Taylor, president of UAW Local 222 at Oshawa, Ont.—the largest of the seven locals covering 23,000 GM Canada workers—was commenting on the Canadian negotiations expected to resume here Monday.

He said striking workers in Toronto, Oshawa, London, Windsor and St. Catharines, Ont., and in Ste. Therese, Que., "should not live in a false sense of security because of the settlement reached Friday in U.S. contract negotiations."

CANADA'S EXPORTS GAIN 14%

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's strong export performance this year persisted through October, despite a slowdown in shipments to the United States.

Preliminary estimates published this week by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics valued October exports at $1,454 million, up by $105 million or 7.8 per cent from October, 1969.

That raised the total for the first 10 months of the year to $13,945 million, 14 per cent more than the $12,228 million reported in the same stretch of last year.

Kelly Douglas

Kelly, Douglas and Co. Ltd. reports sales of $156 million in the 36 weeks ended Sept. 5, a 10.52 per cent increase over sales in the same period last year.

Profit for the period was $1.28 million or 48 cents a share, a 46.82 per cent increase over last year.

U.S. Plans New Look at Oil Import Curbs

WASHINGTON (WP) — Government officials said Friday that they were prepared to suspend controls imposing limits on the import of oil, if convinced that such controls are being utilized as a device to raise prices.

The administration announced Thursday night, following a crude oil price increase by the Gulf Oil Corp. and the Atlantic Richfield Co., that it would investigate the increase, which could cost motorists about one cent a gallon more for gasoline.

Although Economic Council Chairman Paul W. McCracken said he would play "a major role" in the study, officials emphasized that the investigation did not signal a broad acceptance of "jawboning," or return to a wage-price guidepost policy of any kind.

"You can't infer from this that we're moving towards an 'incomes policy,'" a member of the economic council said, "although we are somewhat more open-minded (than we were before)."

Since the election, a new debate has been going on within the administration on the need for an "incomes policy," a loose phrase meaning government pressure on management and labor to moderate wage and price demands.

It can cover anything from "jawboning" (presidential or official statements urging moderation) or something more formal, such as the wage-price guidepost policy as practiced during the Kennedy-Johnson administrations. Pressure to increase supplies is also considered part of an incomes policy.

Officials said that a better indication of any new mood about "incomes policy" might be seen in about 10 days when the council issues the second of its "inflation alerts," promised by the president last summer.

Although the CEA has become increasingly concerned about wage and price pressures, officials said that the chief motivation for the oil price investigation stemmed instead from the special nature of the oil situation, notably potential oil shortages — especially in the northeast.

George A. Lincoln, director of the office of emergency preparedness and chairman of the administration's oil import policy committee announced the investigation, stressing that it was mandatory under a 1959 proclamation requiring him to maintain constant surveillance of imports "in respect to national security."

But the administration underscored the importance it gave to the investigation by having McCracken play a role; this is not mandatory under the act.

Lincoln said he would also seek the asistance of the justice and interior departments.

Informed sources said Friday that the industry would be invited, through a notice in the federal register, to make comments. If, following this procedure, the OEP should decide that recent price increases were not required by national security, then a number of measures might be taken to increase oil supplies.

Great Pacific Buys General Mobile Firm

VANCOUVER (CP) — Sale of General Mobile Accommodations of New Westminster to Great Pacific Industries Ltd. of Vancouver has been announced in a joint statement.

The purchase was for cash, but details were not disclosed.

GMA, which specializes in supplying accommodation for institutional, educational and industrial markets, had annual sales last year of more than $1 million.

Great Pacific also announced the formation of the GPI modular division, integrating all manufacturing and marketing activities of the company's wholly-owned subsidiaries — Porta-Built Industries, Porta-Built Leasing, Fabco Leasing, and GMA.

Westcoast Launches $13 Million Suit

VANCOUVER (CP) — Westcoast Transmission Ltd. started a $13 million damage action Thursday in British Columbia supreme court against Canadian Phoenix Steel and Pipe Ltd. of Edmonton.

Westcoast claims damages for alleged failure of pipes in a pipeline running from gasfields in northeastern B.C. to its processing plant at Fort Nelson.

It alleges failures occurred in the 48-mile line which required it to take alternate measures for gas delivery.

VICTORIA, B.C., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1970 —PAGE 25

The Commodore Makes a Last Bid to Bail Out Appeal

A sign at the Hillside Shopping Centre foretells the arrival of Santa Claus.

Though the date is only Nov. 14, the Christmas season is creeping toward us. Unlike children, United Appeal staff and agencies cannot wait until Dec. 25.

Time is running out on the campaign. Commodore R. V. Henning, campaign chairman, said Friday that he cannot keep the Appeal running beyond Dec. 5.

When the Appeal began seven weeks ago, he had hoped to run a tight, brisk drive. Completion target date then was Oct. 31.

But donations arrived slowly. And it was not until the last two weeks in October that campaign totals began to look respectable.

Figures for Friday, Nov. 13, show that the Appeal has raised $482,947, 68.9 per cent of its hoped-for total of $701,314.

To reach that total, the campaign must average $70,000 a week, or 10 per cent of its total goal in each of the three remaining weeks.

This week, donations went up approximately five per cent. All these statistics indicate that the Appeal may not reach its goal. And there are other hard facts contributing to this possibility.

Henning said that the key division of the campaign, the large corporations, needs at least $120,000 more if it is to match what Community Chest planners thought it could earlier this year.

Other divisions are lagging. These include, construction — slammed by labor-management disputes in the spring — general firms, professional, business districts and publis service.

Henning said he will consider the campaign successful if it reaches $650,000. He bases this on the fact that 1970 has been an off-year. Unemployment is up, jobs are almost non-existent, people are budget-conscious.

Victoria is not alone with a limping United Appeal campaign. Vancouver, with two weeks to go, has raised 71.2 per cent of its goal. Appeal staff is asking for an additional $1.24 million in Vancouver.

Calgary and Winnipeg are lagging, though Edmonton has topped 100 per cent and Toronto appears likely to do the same.

Henning says he is optimistic, and he backs it up with these observations:

More than 170 contacts remain to be made in the large corporations division.

And 41 companies increased their donations this year. These donations, as do all corporate figures, include personal and company totals.

He also says that more money will arrive from the federal service employees, area teachers, provincial civil servants and individual donors.

If these areas contribute at least $50,000 more, and the large and small corporations another $100,000, the Appeal will be over the $630,000 mark.

But with this figure, the Appeal still faces a $70,000 shortfall.

The contingency fund is not much over $10,000. This means that any substantial shortfall leaves two options.

The Community Chest can start the unprecedented process of cutting agency grants. Or it can dip into the legacy reserve for the first time.

The legacy reserve is nearly $300,000, but some of this money has been willed to the Chest under certain provisions. Interest from this fund traditionally has been transferred to the contingency fund, Henning said.

And he said some members of the Chest believe that the legacy fund should be used for special projects, not to meet shortfalls. His personal feeling is that legacy fund money should be used to keep each agency's grant at its projected amount.

But this decision would have to be made by the Community Chest.

Henning's speculative observations aside, most of the remaining money will come from, as did most of that raised to date, individual donors.

Appeal staff estimate that 80 per cent of the campaign's donations come from individuals.

The residential canvass has been a success, although it has accounted for only 16 per cent of the total goal.

Appeal staff notes that the most successful areas of this year's drive have been working and middle-class citizens. But donations from the wealthier Oak Bay-Victoria district and professionals are down from projected amounts.

If Big Business Doesn't Come Up With Its Share He Faces a Hard Choice

WINGS FOLD on this trim yellow "ultra light" plane, built by Gene Stauth and his neighbor, Gordon Amy, the latest home-built to fly out of Victoria International Airport. Plane cost about $6,000, is powered by a 125-hp Lycoming engine, cruises at 110 miles an hour and has a range of about 400 miles. Stauth took it on maiden flight last week. (Irving Strickland photo.)

THE ULTRA-LIGHT PLANE-WRIGHTS

They Fly by Night — In Basements

By DON VIPOND

Each evening around Victoria there are about a dozen people who drop knife and fork after supper and hustle off to basement, garage or workshop and a special hobby.

In the age of the Saturn 5 they are kinfolk to the Wright brothers. They are building their own airplanes.

Dick Thuillier is a firefighter with the department of national defence at Belmont Park. Awhile back he was chatting with a government inspector about the "home-builts" (don't call them that) or "ultra lights" (that's better).

Just how many people are building planes around here? Dick asked in passing. From 200 to 300 between Victoria and Vancouver, replied the inspector, whose job it is to see they meet government specifications.

That shook Dick, who is working on his own two-seater amphibian ultra light, and set him to thinking. Why don't these people get together, maybe share their experience and save some of their numbers a lot of grief?

So he stuck an ad in the paper inviting those interested to contact him. And last week the Victoria Ultra Light Aircraft Association held its first meeting at the Victoria Flying Club, hard by the Pat Bay airport.

Of the 20 or so people there about eight have planes under construction and another three or four are ready to start.

"I'm not really trying to encourage people to build these," Thuillier explained later. "I want them to know what they're getting into."

Dick knows. And it hasn't discouraged him a bit. But it's estimated that of all those who start, only about 10 per cent finish the job and ride their hobbies into the sky.

What does it take to build your own plane?

In general terms, about three years of your spare time, $3,000 to $4,000 for the simpler models (you can spend up to $8,000)—and perseverance, a willingness to pay attention to details.

Dick says anyone capable of doing a good job on a boat could build a plane. But you also need a certain amount of theory of flight and it helps if you passed geometry.

People who might scoff at do-it-yourself planes are reminded that's where it all began — in the Wright brothers' bicycle shop. Since then their history has gone full circle.

First came government regulations on aircraft construction in the 'twenties, when planes went commercial and when too many people began killing themselves in their own creations. The last home-builts of the pioneer era flew (or otherwise) in the early 'thirties.

From then until about 1960, nothing. Since then things have really started to roll.

The Americans led the way and a number of aeronautical engineers produced designs for fun and profit. There are now over 100 designs to choose from. Plans will cost you roughly $50 to $100.

The department of transport, which rules on such matters in Canada, established the ultra light category of aircraft, the only classification for the home-builder.

Among the rules: no more than room for two. And you have to do at least 50 per cent of the construction yourself (a step to prevent blossoming of basement airplane plants).

A DOT inspector makes at least three inspections during construction and if you deviate from accepted plans, you'd better be able to prove your case. (You don't have to work from an accepted design but then you'd have to prove everything will work).

Thuillier notes that not everyone who builds a plane is a pilot. There appears to be two groups: the craftsmen, fascinated by the building challenge, and the pilots who are such "flying nuts" their interest spills beyond flying to building. They need to be craftsmen, too.

Gene Stauth is a bus driver in Victoria who last week took his ultra light on its maiden flight. He and his neighbor, Gordon Amy, spent their spare time in the last three years building the handsome little yellow Stits Playmate.

Stauth's plane is the fourth ultra light to take to Victoria skies in recent years. There are about 30 flying out of Vancouver.

The Victoria Ultra Light Aircraft Association will meet at the Victoria Flying Club hangar the first Wednesday of each month.

Ask the Times

Q. Can you give me an address to which I could write to get some information on cyclamates?—B.J.B.

A. The federal food and drug directorate is probably your best source for informed information. The director-general is R. A. Chapman. The regional director for this area is E. L. Devlin. His address is 1001 West Pender Street, Vancouver.

Q. In old books an f is often found in place of an s, e.g. It fhall be done. When did this practice cease?—G.W.

A. During the 18th century the Gothic or "black-letter" type used by early printers was replaced with Roman characters and the long s (that appeared as an f) gave way to the ordinary s.

Teacher Salaries Hinge on Meet

Agreement on teacher salaries for 1971 in the Greater Victoria school district hinged on a final meeting today between negotiators for the teachers and the school board.

Don Johannessen, representing teachers, said negotiators met until 1 a.m. today in an attempt to meet the provincial contract deadline of midnight Friday.

He said how close the two sides are to an agreement "depends on where you stand."

"I would hope we don't have to go to arbitration."

Sixty-six of the province's 77 school districts have completed contract talks.

Officials of the B.C. Teachers' Federation said it is the best record for pre-arbitration settlements in many years.

Last year there were only 12 pre-arbitration settlements, and 53 districts went to arbitration.

The 1971 settlements have averaged a 1.9 per cent increase in salaries, said Jurd Kirby, the BCTF's assistant director for economic welfare,

Sisters Firm on No Sale

A decision by the Sisters of St. Ann not to sell their land alongside St. Joseph's Hospital is a firm one, the order's provincial superior said today.

"It's closed definitely for now," said Sister Kathleen Moroney of the land sale issue. But she repeated that if at some time in the future, part or all of the land is needed for hospital expansion, the Sisters will be ready to negotiate.

Sister Moroney had been asked to comment on statements from Health Minister Ralph Loffmark Friday which suggested he thinks the Sisters' announcement Thursday that the land sale is off is something less than definite.

Loffmark said in Vancouver Friday he was disappointed to hear there was "some hesitation" on the part of the Sisters to sell the 7.1 acres.

PATIENCE URGED

Patience and understanding must be exercised and a few days should be allowed "to let the matter settle," he said.

The Sisters said Thursday they had never wanted to sell the land but had been advised by experts it was vital to the hospital's future. Now experts were advising it wasn't so the sale is off.

TOO BIG

The Order is dedicated to hospital care and to teaching, and withdrawal of the land offer means the Sisters will be able to carry on their high school, located on the property to have been sold.

The Sisters are still willing to give to the community their $3 million plus equity in the hospital they founded 93 years ago. In recent years they have decided the hospital has grown too big for them to be responsible for.

Development plans at St. Joseph's have been plagued for over a year by arguments involving the society designated to take over the hospital, the region's hospital board, the city and the provincial government.

Davis 'Did Duty' On Fish Order

David Anderson, MP for Esquimalt-Saanich, says there is no reason why Mayor Courtney Haddock should be upset by Federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis' order to provide water for the salmon in Goldstream.

"He (Davis) must enforce the law, as he has done in other parts of Canada," he said. "He was doing his duty. If he had not taken action, I would have been the first person to be critical of the minister."

Haddock, who is chairman of the Greater Victoria Water Board, accused Davis of "childish political ploy" and of "trying to get in on the act" as a means of attracting attention.

(Davis in a letter to the mayor threatened to enforce the fisheries act if the board did not act to save the fish all year round.)

Action to save the salmon, the mayor said, was taken without help or threats from Davis.

Said Anderson: "The minister was not trying to get in on the act as he was being well informed of the Goldstream situation by federal fisheries officers in Victoria and Vancouver."

Moonlighting Favored By Armed Forces Head

The man who heads Canada's West Coast forces, Rear-Admiral Richard Leir, says he favors moonlighting by forces personnel — holding down outside jobs that don't interfere with military duties.

Leir said today a "great number" of the 3,000 men and women in uniform at the Victoria maritime base do outside work, particularly young married persons with heavy financial responsibilities.

"It creates some friction, because the man at sea can't get outside income, and he tends to resent the ability to do so in the case of land personnel.

"But forces personnel are citizens like everyone else, and if they want to earn extra income it's just fine. They know the rules, and they don't let outside work impinge on their duties."

HANG-DOG LEADERS

(Gerald Mulholland, 37, a CFB Esquimalt seaman and part-time taxi driver, was slain Tuesday while driving taxi. Three men, two of them CFB Esquimalt personnel, were charged today with non-capital murder in the slaying.)

Leir, who assumed command of coast forces June 9, does not intend to mince words on things considering him — military or otherwise.

Queried on his recent call for strong public support for law enforcement agencies, he explained:

TRULY CANADIAN

"I belong to a society like everyone else. I'm a Canadian. I represent the new look in the armed forces. A new service has been created and you can't expect the old kind of leaders who sat back with hang-dog faces."

A strong advocate of unification, Leir says that prior to its implimentation, all three services patterned their traditions on those of other countries.

Those traditions had to be destroyed to build a truly Canadian force, he said.

"No other armed force in the west has been faced with this. No one has taken their armed forces, completely disintegrated them and then set about building a new look."

His most important — and challenging — task, says Leir is to "build up the tone" of the men under him, by tackling the problem of drugs, drinking and dress.

"We have more drug problems than any of the five commands in Canada. This is probably because we're located nearer the source of supply, the Orient.

"I intend to make no compromise on drugs. Users will be dealt with in the due process of our law. Each case will be reviewed by Ottawa. I cannot risk other men or expensive equipment."

Drinking, says the admiral, is becoming an increasing problem among the young.

"This has been brought under my microscope. The rules have been a little too liberal."

Leir is determined that his men will have pride in their uniform.

"If a man has only one cap issued to him and it's scuffy, he can get another. If he doesn't he can always join another club, or the 10 per cent unemployed on the street."

Leir's get-tough attitude is in direct contrast to that of Admiral Elmo Zumwalt, chief of U.S. naval operations, who announced this week he would allow liquor in barracks, long hair, hard rock music clubs and an end to "Mickey Mouse" clothing regulations for sailors.

Arthur Mayse . . .

AT INTERVALS through the years, I have croaked warnings about what was likely to overtake Canada's book publishing industry if it didn't pull up its quaintly-patterned socks.

My thesis is and has been that the publisher who hopes to keep his nose above water in a competitive world can't afford to inhabit a self-created vacuum. He must find, encourage and develop good writers. It isn't enough to make his chief function the rather timid jobbing of another country's books.

But now that the worst has begun to happen, I take no pleasure in seeing my fears come to roost. After all, it's important that a country overshadowed by a giant neighbor should have a healthy book-publishing business well-rooted in its native soil.

At the same time, those who would have the Canadian taxpayer rescue Toronto's venerable Ryerson Press from the Yankee octopus should be aware of one uncomfortable probability.

Ryerson, a house gone over the hill, might be considerably embarrassed by rescue from a reported $2,000,000 deal with a Canada-based American offshoot. If saved from that not altogether unhappy fate, Ryerson might be expected to shape up; and I'm by no means sure that it could do so.

At this point, let us call on a Canadian bookseller in his den. He too would like nothing better than to offer the output of a flourishing Canadian book-publishing industry.

First-off, he named an indigenous house which he feels is doing a very good job. This is McClelland and Stewart, publishers who encourage talent, vigorously promote their authors' books, and keep a sharp eye on the Canadian scene.

Significantly, Canada's two most successful book-writers—Pierre Berton and Farley Mowat—are in the McClelland and Stewart stable.

The bookseller then gave honorable mention to a couple of hard-trying Westerners (Hurtig in Edmonton, and Gray's Publishing Ltd. of Sidney).

From there on, the going grew tougher.

Doubleday? Some good books to its credit, and an interest in the Canadian writer. But the child of an American parent firm.

Macmillans in Canada? Long service rendered, but kissing cousin to Viking in the United States and Macmillans in England.

When I mentioned Ryerson Press, his juices turned sour. Here, he suggested, was a firm that had got itself in a mess. It had lost authors, in large part through failure to promote their work. It did not function efficiently, its Christmas book-list failed utterly to turn him on, and its future under its own steam looked nothing less than bleak.

Admittedly, it was a pity that Canada's oldest book-publishing house should find itself in need of bailing out. But as he saw it, that was not a task to be loaded on the residents of Ontario or any other province through government subsidy.

As a man who sells books for a living, his viewpoint on book publishing in Canada at large was less than flattering to the trade.

"The main problem with Canadian publishers," he said, "is the stuff they handle. And too much gets passed over that has a terrific potential."

The Canadian writer didn't escape entirely unscathed. Waiting for him is a reading audience that has proved itself receptive when his work is good. When it isn't, he needn't expect a spirit of nationalism to warm Canadians into laying out for his book.

All this does nothing to brighten a literary picture that could use a little sunshine. Neither does it answer the related problem of providing sufficient Canadian-written textbooks of acceptable quality to fill the curricula lists of our schools.

Perhaps answers will be forthcoming when Canadian book publishers in general trade their notorious timidity for the courage, initiative, and willingness to gamble that successful publishing demands.

If they don't, I'm afraid that their American opposite numbers, who to their credit display those qualities, will gobble 'em up.

Spokesman Hopeful Strike End Near

The spokesman for striking hospital engineers said today he's hopeful the walkout will end Monday.

That's when the B.C. Hospitals Association will consider a proposed settlement hammered out in marathon talks this week and recommended by bargaining teams by both sides.

Members of the International Union of Operating Engineers, the men who operate the steam plants at hospitals, went on strike last Monday after months of contract talks failed to resolve differences over work hours and pay increases.

Royal Jubilee and St. Joseph's Hospitals in Victoria were among the 16 struck by the stationary engineers. But union pickets made sure throughout the strike the hospital operations were not hampered.

Ed Callan, international representative for the union, said its representatives approved Friday the tentative settlement worked out in talks the previous two days.

It only remains for the hospital association to also approve the settlement. The labor relations council of the association meets other association members Monday in Vancouver to consider it.

No details of the proposed settlement were revealed.

There are 137 operating engineers at 28 B.C. hospitals involved in the dispute although the strike was confined to 16 hospitals. Supervisory personnel have been running the steam plants this week.

The only threat to the hospitals' operation has been depleting fuel supplies. Fuel truck drivers would not cross picket lines. The engineers' union agreed Friday to allow a week's supply of fuel oil to be delivered but pickets will remain at least until Monday.

Amnesia Victim Meets Mother

TORONTO (CP) — Rose Ann Hebert had to be told Friday night that the woman who had just walked into her hospital room was her mother.

Then the 15-year-old Saint John, N.B., girl, who has no memory of her life beyond a little more than a week ago, broke into tears.

Her mother, Elizabeth Hebert, had just arrived in Toronto after a 28-hour train trip from Saint John.

Mrs. Hebert, who hadn't seen her daughter for 15 days, spent about 35 minutes in the room.

"She seemed very bright and normal, but she couldn't remember," Mrs. Hebert said of her daughter.

"I mentioned several of her girlfriends back home but the names didn't mean anything."

Doctors say Rose Ann, who hitchhiked to Toronto after "waking up" outside a pool hall in Fredericton, is suffering from amnesia, probably brought on by something she saw or heard that "terrorized" her, doctors say.

DIDN'T KNOW BROTHER

Salvation Army officials here turned the girl over to police who took her to hospital. She was identified after a picture of her on television was seen by her brother Leon, 17, who lives in Orillia. Rose Ann didn't recognize Leon either when he came to the hospital to identify her.

Mrs. Hebert, who reported her daughter missing Nov. 1, said Rose Ann had fallen and hit her head during a track meet last summer and since that time had experienced dizzy spells.

She knew of nothing that might have frightened her daughter, however, Mrs. Hebert said.

A child psychiatrist working with Rose Ann said Friday the publicity surrounding the girl may hinder her recovery.

Dr. Robert Simmons said the girl's amnesia may be a symptom of some anxiety and the sudden rush of attention given her may make her reluctant to give this symptom up even with extensive treatment.

Rose Ann will remain in hospital for at least two weeks and her mother will live with a married sister here.

Mrs. Hebert, mother of eight, borrowed enough money for a one-way train ticket to Toronto. Rose Ann's father, Sylvain, said in Saint John Friday he had accepted an offer from an anonymous benefactor to pay the air fare for Mrs. Hebert's and Rose Ann's trip back to Saint John.

Yippie Revolution Bid Falls Flat

PRESTWICK, Scotland (AP) — American Yippies Jerry Rubin and Stew Albert were put aboard a New York-bound plane today, their bid to revolutionize Britain a flop.

After shouting defiance, they left quickly.

The Americans were flown here from Belfast, Northern Ireland, and escorted by immigration officials to a British Overseas Airways jet for the transatlantic flight.

Rubin and Albert were seized by Belfast police Friday as they left a news conference in a student's back-street apartment.

The two were picked up because they had overstayed their permission to remain in Britain a week. They backed down on a threat to defy British authorities. No deportation order was issued after they agreed to leave of their own accord.

Both gave a clenched-fist salute as they boarded the plane.

So ended the Americans' admitted campaign bid to bring revolution to Britain.

The London Sun said in a front-page editorial: "Good riddance."

Britain, The Sun said, has had enough of "the antics of Rubin and his foul-mouthed 'revolutionaries.'"

Rubin and a band of Yippie followers disrupted the David Frost television show last Saturday night. They shouted obscenities, threatened to blow up the broadcasting studio, drenched Frost with water and damaged equipment.

My Lai Libel Suit Dismissed by Judge

BOSTON (AP) — A $110 million libel suit against Time magazine by Capt. Ernest Medina of the United States Army has been dismissed by U.S. District Judge Francis J. W. Ford.

Medina is awaiting a military trial on a charge of murder in connection with the alleged My Lai massacre in South Vietnam two years ago.

The magazine article in question reported that an eyewitness had seen Medina shoot a child and inquired why no charges were brought against him at that time.

In his decision Friday, Judge Ford said: "Medina was a public officer . . . in addition a figure of public interest. Clearly the publication is entitled to protection and entitled to a judgment in its favor."

The court also noted that Time "asserts that the article was published with the belief that the facts stated were true and without malice."

Cutler Elected

Local 30 of the Department of Veterans' Affairs component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada has elected Kenneth Cutler president for a one-year term.

The 313-member local consists mainly of employees of the Veterans' Hospital and Belmont Building.

'Involve Citizens'

A candidate seeking election to trustee on the Greater Victoria School Board says more citizens should be involved in decisions affecting the educational system.

Frank Preston, 38, announced today he is running for office in the December 12 elections.

He will press for greater citizen participation on educational matters and changes in keeping with the needs of a changing society, he says.

Preston is president of the Victoria Liberal Association and is active in the City Hall Employees Association and the Vancouver Island Anglican Camping Association.

He has also been involved in several community action programs involving education. He is a technician with the city engineering department.
